Kitchens Feature Convenience Of Good Lighting

An inexpensive ceiling light for a kitchen or breakfast room is the silvered bowl lamp fixture which can be installed by simply screwing it into an outlet. If you are renting, this type of fixture can be detached and carried along as easily as a portable lamp. Notice in the picture the tubular wall bracket that puts the light right on the work counter.

By Louise Brown

IS A MODERN spic-and-span kitchen one of the things you yearn for this spring? If you are building or remodeling, the kitchen is one room in the house that should have a great deal of thought and consideration from the standpoint of the family's health and happiness and the housewife's time and effort.

One item many people neglect in planning a new kitchen is the lighting. It may seem like a small thing but it actually means a great deal in kitchen comfort and efficiency.

Even though you are not having an entirely new kitchen, you can begin modernizing the lighting—and at very little expense.

In all but the tiniest of kitchens a single ceiling fixture is insufficient for good working light. Chances are that if you have only a ceiling light, you stand at your sink, table or range with the concentration of good light behind you, with your shadow falling on your work and slowing up your vision. Hence the need for side lights.

There are a number of ways to provide these, depending upon the condition of your pocketbook.

One of the easiest and cheapest is the portable wall lamp. This can be hung as quickly as a picture, and its socket plugged in at the nearest electric outlet. In a breakfast nook, too, such a lamp can be used with nice effect, and there are many types of shades provided with these units.

Frequently in new kitchens the wiring has been planned so that permanent side fixtures can be installed above all the working areas. The shades of these fixtures should be dense enough to sift out glare and to distribute an abundance of smooth light.

Peek beneath the upper cupboards in some new kitchens and you will see another source of local work-light. Hugging the wall close beneath the cupboard are strung the new tubular bulbs. These are not visible to the eye when one is standing and working, but the light is there when it is needed.

In still other kitchens there's a lighted glass panel in the ceiling above the sink. This gives good lighting if the built-in box above the glass is large enough to accommodate bulbs of adequate size.

Purely for beauty and decoration is the use of a glass or plastic wall between the upper cupboard and the top of the lower one, with colored lights shining through. The colors are easily changed at the flip of a switch.
