LUCKY

The police sergeant looked at the newest recruit and shook his head. "You have been on the force for several months now, and never once brought in a case," he said.

The constable hung his head. "Now," went on the sergeant, "the squire up at the hall has just phoned to say that somebody is stealing apples from his orchard. Go up there tonight and watch for the thief."

After watching near the hall for some time the constable saw a man slinking along with a sack on his back. He pounced on him, opened the sack, and emptied a quantity of silver on to the ground.

"H'm," he said, after surveying the spoils, "my mistake. You can thank your lucky stars it wasn't apples."
