THE SWEETEST WORD. One sweet word of holy meaning

Cometh to me o'er and o'er. And the echoes of its music Linger ever-evermore; Trust-no other word we utter Can so sweet and precious be, Tuning all life's jarring discords Into heavenly harmony.

Clouds of thickest blackness gathered O'er my soul's dark sea of sin, And the port of heaven was guarded From my guilty entering in: Then came Jesus, walking to me, O'er the surging waves of sin, Calling, clear above the tempest. "He that trusteth heaven shall win!"

Now, through all the sacred pages, Where my woe and doom had been, Gleam those golden words of promise, "He that trusteth heaven shall win." Blessed, sure, and blood-bought promise, Let me drink its sweetness in-He that trusts his soul to Jesus, "He that trusteth heaven shall win."

Trust-oh, Saviour, give its fulness To me at thy feet in prayer, Grant my dying lips to breathe it. Leave its lingering sweetness there; Sweetness there, to stay the breaking Of the hearts which love me so, Whispering from my silent coffin, "Trust the hand which lays me low." Loved ones, as ye rear the marble,

Pure above my waiting dust, Grave no other word upon it But the holiest, sweetest-Trust: For this password know the angels, Guarding o'er the pearly door, Password to his blessed presence. Whom I trust for evermore, HERBERT NEWBURY

A STORY OF TURKEY BIVER, IOWA. On Turkey river lived Amasa Barker, a worthy itinerant minister of the Methodist church. On the side-walk of a broad avenue, where housands rush unheeding and unheeded, a policeman stood musing with himself what he should do to relieve several cases of severe suffering very recently witnessed in the discharge of his official duty. Just then a carriage rolled along, whose owner and occupants were utter strangers. Moved by some unseen influence, he stopped the carriage, and the lock. It is Saturday night, and business inquired of the lady within if she would like to relieve the distress of those known to be worthy. 'She replied in the affirmative, and he gave her the address of three parties greatly needing immediate aid, and saked her to drive to their door and judge for herself .-He directed the driver to pass on, and returned to his duties with a burden rolled off.-When he again called upon the widow and fatherless, in whose behalf he had thus appealed to a stranger, he learned that the lady had complied with his request, visited and promptly relieved their necessities, an act for which their hearts were overflowing with angel guide had sent him to that carriage, wards. being freely discussed by the guests, it was referred for answer to the host, upon whom was the burden of four-score years. He asked if they had noticed a grove of trees before the dwelling, and, said—"When the spring comes brells. and in the soft air the buds are breaking on the trees and they are covered with blossoms I think, How beautiful is spring! The brandy carrier happened to catch sight of the umbrella carrier, and at once staggered toward him, exclaiming in his loudest tones: "How do you do, Dr. Bethune. Let me take your-hic-hand, my dear sir-r-r. I am proud to testify-y-y my respects for you, sir." "Speak a little lower if you please, Mr. Bilkins," murmured Dr. Bethune. But we cannot join with the many who wish this custom, troublesome though it may sometimes be, abolished. It is a relic of the olden time in America when men went to church with their muskets, and had their children and wives take the inside of the ry. Surely the preservation of this custom as a token of respect to their memory, is not too great a burden for their fashionable sons and daughters of to-day, who owe them so much of their present prosperity and wealth. The people of England undergo every form of inconvenience rather than give up time-honored customs, and we laugh at them for it. We care too little for these things. The American motto is "Let the dead past bury the dead." A better motto is the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would that others do unto you;" how will it be when we are dead ?- New York Gazette.

Lost Treasures. -At a large hotel in an Atlantic city, one day, a lively conversation arose over the fish at dinner, and several of the guests related some extraordinary stories about finding pearls and other valuables in the entrails of fish, when an old man, who had been quietly listening to what was passing, broke forth with the following: "When I was a young man I was employed in a large importing house in this city, and, as usual with most persons of my age then, I fell in love with a certain young lady, and in due course of time was engaged. About two months before our marriage was to take place. I was suddenly sent to Europe on very important business, occasioned by the death of one of the firm in Europe. I took a hasty and affectionate leave of my intended, with the promise to hear from each other often. I was detained somewhat longer than I expected, but their hearts to beating softly, as they used to just before I sailed for home I purchased a handsome and very valuable diamond ring, intending it for the wedding ring; and when coming up New York Bay, expecting shortly to be with her who was soon to be mine, I shutters with a will; click goes the key in was glancing over the morning papers, which had been brought aboard by the pilot boat, when what should I see but an account of her marriage with another, which so enraged me that, in my passion, I threw the ring overboard.
