The old "Schloes" was so elegant that we and all the company of visitors had to put on great cloth slippers over our own shoes, and we went shoving over the waxed floors as if in snow shoes; and the proceeding was so ridiculous to our American minds that C--- and I were convulsed with laughter-and we were the more put to because we didn't want to let the usher see our merriment. I have not time to tell you more minutely of the glory of the place, much of which came from Freder ick the Great. The Chapel, of recent origin, is superb, and so wondrously varied and handsome that I could by no means take it in during the time we were allowed to remain .-There is much gold and silver coming down from Frederick the Great's time, and great chandeliers of rock crystal. But even the glory of this latter temple of kings was eclipsed by the "New Palace," at Pousdam, which Frederick the Great built after the 7 years' war to show his, enemies that he was not bankrupt yet. One room, called the Grotto, is utterly beyond description, and entirely sui generis. The floor is marble, and the walls and ceiling are of shells, and pearls, and crystals, and every kind of precious stones and of minerals. The walls have thirteen strata-alternately of maible, and of the materials stated above, let into the wall in their natural state.
