"Why, gentlemen of the jury," said he, "this is really a very small affair; I wender any one would bring such a com plaint into Court; if we are going on at this rate, we shall have business enough on our bands. Why, I recollect when I was in College, that nothing was more common than to go cut foraging. We used to have nany a good supper in this way. We did not get the poultry too often in the same place, and there was no harm done, no fault found." Nothwithstanding this appeal the jury convicted the prisons After the Court rose one of the jury, a plain and far-mer, meeting the counter, camplemented him on his ingenuity, and now, aquire, said he, fixing rather a knowing look upon him, !"I should like to ask you one question : which road do you take in going home, the upper or the lower?" . The lower," said the connsellor. "Well then it's no matter: I only wanted to observe that if you were going my way I would just jog on before

Incidents however, now and then picked up he out ou the way receptacles, gaserve to confirm facts, and to refute slanders. L. Boilers, Ir., writing to the Oncida Circular in 1867 a story of his experience as a volum teer in the late rebellion, apeaks most high ly of Grant's daring and consider during the battles of Grand Guile and Pare Gilbson. The following little anecabate which Hollers relates may be new to most of our readers:

"During the battle (Port Gibson), Gen. Grant was everywhere in the thickest of the fight, directing movements, regardless of his own personal safety. At one time, when a six-pounder which was shelling the rebels had been just charged, he rode up, and, springing from his horse, said: 'Let me take that a moment.' He immediately pointed the gun at a large tree, and fixing his sim said, 'Now fire.' The shot struck in the crotch of the tree, the branches parted and fell, and out tumbled a pair of sharpshooters who had been picking off our men, "Hurrah!" said the General, and swinging his hat and mounting his horse he was out of sight in a moment."
