IS THERE NO ROOM IN THE ANGEL LAND.

[A short time since the writer listened to an interesting discourse by a Methodist preacher, in which he related the following touching incident: A mother who was preparing some flour to bake into bread, left it for a few moments, when little Mary—with childish curiosity to see what it was—took hold of the dish, which fell to the floor spilling the contents. The mother struck the child a severe blow, saying with anger that she was always in the way. Two weeks after, little Mary sickened and died. On her death-bed, while delirious, she asked her mother if there would be no room for her among the angels. "I was always in your way, mother—you had no room for little Mary! And will I be in the angels' way?" The broken-hearted mother then felt no sacrifice too great could she have saved her child.]

Is there no room among the angels
For the spirit of your child?
Will they take your little Mary
In their loving arms so mild?
Will they ever love me fondly,
As my story books have said?
Will they find a home for Mary—
Mary numbered with the dead?
Tell me truly, darling mother,
Is there room for such as me?
Will I gain the home of spirits,
And the shining angels see?

I have sorely tried you, mother—
Been to you a constant care:
And you will not miss me, mother,
When I dwell among the fair;
For you have no room for Mary—
She was ever in your way,
And she fears the good will shun her;
Will they, darling mother, say?
Tell me—tell me truly, mother,
Ere life's closing hour doth come,
Do you think that they will keep me,
In the shining angels' home?

I was not so wayward, mother,
Not so very—very bad,
But what tender love would nourish,
And make Mary's heart so glad:
Oh! I yearned for pure affection,
In this world of bitter woe:
And I long for bliss immortal,
In that land where I must go:
Tell me once again, dear mother,
Ere you take the parting kiss,
Will the angels bid me welcome
To that world of perfect bliss?

PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

A NEW AND TRUE STORY TOLD OF THE LATE PRESIDENT.

During the summer of the most disastrous and doubtful year of the late American war, the Colonel of a New Hampshire regiment lay for some weeks extremely ill of camp fever, near Hampton Roads in Virginia. Hearing of his critical condition, his wife left her Northern home and after much difficulty, made her way to his bedside. Her cheerful presence and careful nursing so far restored him that he was in a short time able to be transferred to Washington.

In the Potomac river the steamer in which the invalid officer, Colonel Scott, and his wife had taken passage, was sunk in a collision with a larger vessal in the night time. The crew and nearly all the soldiers on board were rescued or saved themselves; but amid the horrible confusion of the scene, Colonel Scott became separated from his wife, and she was lost. The Colonel was picked up in the water by the crew of the larger steamer, and under his direction every effort was made to discover his wife, or rather her body, for all hope of finding her alive was soon abandoned. The sad search was fruitless; it was resumed in the morning, the people along the shore, humane confederates, lending their aid. But the gray, sullen river refused to give up its dead, and the young officer, half frantic with grief, was compelled to go on to Washington. Within a week, however, he received word from below that the body of the lady had been washed on shore; that those good country people, generous foes, had secured it, cared for it, and were keeping it for him.

It happened that just at that time imperative orders were issued from the War Department, prohibiting all intercourse with the peninsula—a necessary precaution against the premature disclosure of important military plans. So it was with some misgivings that Colonel Scott applied to Secretary Stanton for leave to return to Virginia on his melancholy duty.

"Impossible, Colonel," replied Mr. Stanton, firmly; "no man can have leave to go down the river, at this time, on any private mission whatever. Our present exigencies demand the most stringent regulations; and I hope I need not say to you that no merely personal considerations should be allowed to interfere with great national interests. Your case is a sad one; but this is a critical perilous, cruel time. 'The dead must bury the dead.'"

The Colonel would have entreated, but the busy Secretery cut him short with another "impossible," from which there was absolutely no appeal. He went forth from the presence, and returned to his hotel, quite overwhelmed with grief.

Fortunately he was that afternoon visited by a friend, to whom he told the story of his unsuccessful application and sad perplexity, who immediately exclaimed, "Why not apply to the President?"

The Colonel had but little hope, but acknowledging that the plan was worth trying, drove with his friend to the White House.

They were too late. It was Saturday evening, and Mr. Lincoln had gone to spend Sunday at Soldiers' Rest, his summer retreat. This was but a few miles from town, and the Colonel's indomitable friend proposed that they should follow him out, and they went.

There was then a popular belief that all the wronged, the troubled and suffering could find a refuge in "Father Abraham's" capacious bosom; a belief that was not far out of the way. Yet there were times when overburdened, wearied, tortured, the patriarch longed to clear that asylum of his forlorn inmates, to bolt and bar and double lock it against the world; times when life became too hard and perplexing for his genial, honest nature, too serious and tragic and rascally a thing by half.

It happened unluckily that the poor Colonel and his friend found the President in one of the most despondent and perplexed moods. He was in a little private parlor, alone in the gloaming. He was lounging loosely in a large rocking chair, lolling over in all directions. His slippered feet were crossed, his rough head was thrown back, his long throat bare—he was in his shirt sleeves. Yet, dear, fastidious English reader, it was genuine Yankee abandonment of the most of it.

He turned upon his visitors a look of almost savage inquiry. There was, indeed, in his unusually pleasant eye, a wild, angry gleam—a something like the glare of a worried animal at bay.

Col. Scott proceeded very modestly to tell his story, but the President interrupted him, to say brusquely, "Go to Stanton; that is his business."

"I have been to him, Mr. President, and he will do nothing for me."

"You have been to him, and got your answer, and still presume to come to me! Am I to have no rest? no privacy? Must I be dogged to my last fastnesses, and worried to death by inches? Mr. Stanton has done just right. He knows what he is about. Your demands are unreasonable, sir."

But, Mr. Lincoln, I thought you would feel for me."

"Feel for you! Good God! I have to feel for five hundred thousand more unfortunate than you. We are at war, sir; don't you know that we are at war? Sorrow is the lot of all; bear your share like a man and a soldier."

"I try to, Mr. President—but it seems hard. My devoted wife—her life for coming to nurse me in my sickness, I can not even take her body home to my child ren."

"Well, she ought not to have come down to the army. She should have staid at home. That is the place for women. But if they will go tearing about the country, in such times as these, and running into all sorts of dangers, they must take the consequences! Not but that I am sorry for you, Colonel. As for your wife, she's at rest, and I wish I were."

Saying this, the President leaned back wearily in his chair and closed his eyes, not noticing, except by a slight wave of his hand, the departure of his visitors.

I am not ashamed to confess that my hero tossed restlessly that night upon a pillow wet with manly tears, that he was desperate and resentful, utterly unreconciled to the decrees of Providence and the War Department, and that he thought Abraham Lincoln as hard as he was ugly, and as inhumane as he was ungainly.

Toward morning he fell asleep, and slept late. Before he was fully dressed, there came a quick knock at the door of his chamber, and he opened it to President Lincoln!

The good man came forward, pale and eager, tears glistening in his eyes, and grasped the Colonel's hand, saying, "I treated you brutally last night. I ask your pardon. I was utterly tired out, badgered to death. I generally become about as savage as a wild cat by Saturday, drained dry of the "milk of human kindness." I must have seemed to you the very gorilla the rebels paint me. I was sorry enough for it when you were gone. I could not sleep a moment all last night, so I thought I'd drive into town in the cool of the morning and make it all right. Fortunately, I had but very little difficulty in finding you."

"This is very good of you, Mr. President," said the Colonel, deeply moved.

"No, it isn't; but that was very bad of me last night. I never should have forgiven myself if I had let that piece of ugly work stand. That was a noble wife of yours, Colonel. You were a happy man to have such a noble woman to love you: and you must be a good fellow, or such a woman would never have risked so much for you. And what grand women there are in these times, Colonel! What angels of devotion and mercy, and how brave and plucky!—going everywhere at the call of duty, facing every danger. I tell you, if it were not for the women we should all go to the devil, and should deserve to. They are the salvation of the nation. Now, come, Colonel; my carriage is at the door. I'll drive you to the War Department, and we'll see Stanton about this matter."

Even at this early hour they found the Secretary at his post. The President pleaded the case of Col. Scott, and not only requested that a leave of absence should be given him, but that a steamer should be sent down the river expressly to bring up the body of his wife. "Humanity, Mr. Stanton," said the good President, his homely face transfigured with the glow of earnest, tender feeling, "humanity should overrule considerations of policy, and even military necessity, in matters like this."

The Secretary was touched, and he said something of his regret at not having felt himself at liberty to grant Col. Scott's request in the first place.

"No, no, Mr. Stanton," said the President, "you did right in adhering to your own rules; you are the right man for this place. If we had such soft-headed old fool as I here, there would be no rules or regulations that the army of the country could depend upon. But this is a peculiar case. Only think of that poor woman!"

Of course the "impossible" was accomplished.

To the surprise of the Colonel, the President insisted on driving him to the Navy Yard, to see that the Secretary's order was carried out immediately; seeming to have a nervous fear that some obstacle might be thrown in the way of the pious expedition. He waited at the landing till all was ready, then charged the officers of the steamer to give every assistance and attention to his "friend, Mr. Scott." With him he shook hands warmly at parting, saying, "God bless you, my dear fellow, I hope you will have no more trouble in this sad affair—and, Colonel, try to forget last night."

Away up in a New Hampshire church yard there is a certain grave carefully watched and tended by faithful love. But every April time the violets on that mound speak not alone of the womanly sweetness and devotion of her who sleeps below—they are tender and tearful with the memory of the murdered President.

A BACHELOR friend of ours, passing up the street a few days ago, picked up a thimble. He stood for a moment meditating on the probable owner, when pressing it to his lips, he said—

"Oh, that this were the fair lips of the wearer."

Just as he had finished, a big, fat, ugly colored woman looked out at an upper window and said—

"Bossa, jis please frow dat fimble in de entry, I jist drapt it."
