The Star and Sentinel.

Gettysburg, Friday, April 2, 1869.

THE PLOUGH BOY'S SERENADE.

BY PHILIP LEE.

I am a plough-boy, stout and strong,
As every furrow ploughed,
And this, the burden of my song,
I love one rich and proud.
I have not houses, wealth or lands,
Far better these instead,
An honest heart, and willing hands,
To earn my daily bread.
Oh, hut a single word impart,
To show thou dost not scorn,
The bitter throbbings of my heart,
May then be better borne.
If thou can'st but my love return,
(How would my bosom thrill),
Let but a simple taper burn,
Upon thy window sill.
What! all is silent, cold and dark,
And I must yet despair
Of ever being loved, but hark!
A voice breaks on the air.
"Who is it with discordant voice,
Makes hideous the night,
Your simple eyes shall not rejoice,
To see a taper's light.
"What! wed a tiller of the soil—
A poor and humble hind,
Whose hands are hard and black with toil,
The low of human kind.
Take heed unto this warning, then,
No further seek my face
Or else my father's serving men,
Shall lash thee from the place."
Farewell, proud beauty, I oblige,
Thy wrath can well be borne,
For love is now contempt, and know,
Thy bitter words I scorn.
In yonder cottage lives a maid,
Though humble, good and fair,
If I should ask, I'm not afraid,
But she my lot would share.

CULTIVATE FLOWERS.

I would cultivate in children a love for flowers, and give them from one to ten to care for, as soon as they are capable of doing so. It is a work that tends to beget kindness and tenderness of feeling, and will lead them to seek to be good and lovely, tender and gentle in word and deed. Who would indulge in anger among flowers?

Every Farmer's wife should have a few plants or at least one, to cherish and love. It would lighten her harder labor, and relieve her greater care, and often sooth her perturbed feelings, to give it merely a look, a thought, a draught of water in its need—to watch its growth and catch the fragrance of its opening petals. Perchance I hear one say, "I have no time to spend in that way; I have to work, work, from morning till night, and go to bed with much left unfinished." Well, I know how that is, having had some experience in that line; but the worst part of the matter is, that the spirit, the temper is so worried and fretted. By all means calm that, though no work be done for a week; attend to your flowers; they have a soothing influence. Your "husband does not care how hard you work, nor how tired" you are?—Well, he truly doesn't know—but then it is not likely he will know; and this sin of ignorance in him had better be winked at than fretted over. Again I say cultivate plants and flower; let no day pass without listening, quietly, attentively to their whispering voices, and in your silent communings with them, learn to

"Bless God for flowers,
For the bright, gentle, thoughts they breathe
From out their odorous beauty, like a wreath
Of sunshine to life's hours."

A YOUNG man from the country, who had never seen any fishballs, handed one to his lady-love under the impression it was a doughnut; after breaking his open he carefully examined it, then smelt it, and with sepulchural voice said: "Sal! don't eat that doughnut, there's something dead in this!"
