VALUE OF ADVERTISING .- A writer in the New York Tribune makes this sensible suggestion, which we commend to business men generally: Many a business man is afraid of the expense of advertising, and yet will pay high rents for a prominent store to exhibit his wares, and put up expensive signs, and seems not to know that both are expensive mathods of advertising. methods of advertising.

The instances of men who have made fortunes by advertising are too numerous to question; but how have they done it?—By exercising good judgment; by knowing how, where and when to advertise.—The whole second in the control of the t ing how, where and when to advertise.—
The whole secret is there. Advertising has become a science, and unless its principles are adhered to, large amounts of money may be expended to no purpose.—
