The Journal's definition of a "gentleman" is-or who will dance to their piping. Now, for a moment, imagine a leading member of the Huntingdon Bar, and a Professor of Christianity, acting second-fiddler to the Huntingdon Journal, by circulating its charges of mail stopping against us, and then refusing to retract his FALSE charges or to institute an investigation, as they threatened and as we have requested. This is surely a great compromise of dignity and principle on the part of a christian and a gentleman! We have always thought that when man choses his premises he should be willing to accept legitimate conclusions. But we forbear for the present. TO Up in the figures-Democratic blood. It is celebrated by the angels of God-it is written on the pillars of Heaven, and reflected down to earth. People who go upon surprise parties ought by all means to send notice. One of these called upon a respectable merchant in Albany the other night, and were very much surprised indeed to find him inebriated on the front stairs, while his wife, with a black eye and bruised face, was bathing his temples with ice water. The surprise party, no doubt, speedily retired. 25" The mails stopped," and "robbed."-Journal. 'Where, when, and by whom? We are authorized to offer $100 for any information that will lead to the conviction of any person guilty of "stopping," or "robbing the

Here is another fine chance for the scullions. We have no doubt they need it, hadly now, and will need it worse hereafter.

Mr. Editor:-One great object here, is ways found in accumulated wealth, still I can sometimes abuse their riches, why we should pursue a course that will certainly hazzard our business, and may be the means of involving it in utter ruin. No, the opposite is loss by fire, because he thinks it may not be ically kept, are his chart, by which he is enabled to discover projecting rocks and shoals, and, just as the magnetic needle points to the pole star, so sure will books, if properly kept, point to danger and loss, and the prudent man, thus seeing, will "cut off his losses and let his profits run on." Whatever may be lý, without system in its. books of record, as it would be for the master of a vessel to attempt to cross the ocean without his chart safely for a long time, and indeed, may never meet with any loss, for being without these would be willing to risk either life or property with one so poorly provided with the essentials to safety; they are not to be found. Those, then, who do not purpose themselves to transact business promptly and correctly, cannot long, in any locality or business, have the patronage of those who desire to conduct their business honestly and surely; it is, therefore, of the utmost importance, that young men avail themselves of the opportunities now offered in schools for this purpose, for acquiring a thorough and practical knowledge of Book-keeping. But more than this, the young man who, with a good degree of energy, has taken the pains to acquire a thorough knowledge of the several branches of Book-keeping, has, at once, in his possession, the means of usefulness, respectability and wealth. No branch of education is of greater importance than this, none more likely to secure public confidence, and therefore, it is more certain of success; the time is now upon us, when young men, who may be well qualified in other respects for business, yet wanting in this, one of the most important parts of a business education, are unable to get situations, when, if they had spent a few weeks to acquire a knowledge of the principles and practice of Book-keeping, might have secured situations and much higher compensations than others who have been employed, merely for their knowledge of Bookkeeping, but who, in other respects, have no good reputation as business men. But to conclude, it would be but little use to point out these things, if there be no remedy or preventative, and, as it has been said, that "an ounce of preventative is worth a pound

Austria and England vs. France and Rus-

A great Italian statesman wisely remarked, during the progress of the Eastern War, that the contest in Europe presented more than one aspect-that it was not only a question whether the continent would be despotie or constitutional, autocrat or republican, but whether it should be commercial or anti-commercial. The treaty of Paris put an end to hostilities; but the interests which had caused them remained unchanged,, and the end which the respective Governments had in view was left to be pursued by other means.

Louis Napoleon has apparently labored, since his accession to the throne, for supreme diplomatic power in all the courts of Europe. For this he has sacrificed everything else, and brought France to the verge of financial ruin. He has all but attained his object in Italy; Spain, Turkey, even England; even the identity of his policy with that of St. Petersburg has, since the war, brought him into a close alliance with the Russian Court. He is accused, with much show of probability, of having previously arranged with Alexander I, the whole programme of proceedings at Paris—including even the subterfuge by which Russia has recently sought to evade the fulfillment of the obligation incurred there. It was the fulfillment of the old Napoleonic idea that Russia and France could, without rivalry, divide the power in Europe. England aspired to remove, by war with Russia, the dangers which Russian aggression in the East were preparing for her Asian provinces, and foolishly imagined that the armies of France were aiding her to extend the commercial dominion of Great Britain. Manchester and Birmingham dreamed that the French Emperor was assisting to open the way to free trade with Italy, France, Spain, the Principalities, and the borders of the Black Sea, and to uninterupted progress for British bales and packages across the plains of China. Louis Napoleon never, of course, had any such object, and always intended to "show his hand," to the discomfiture of his credulous ally, just as soon as it became for his interest to do so. He calculated with apparent probability that whenever he withdrew his protection from England, it would remain the most isolated kingdom in Europe, without one solitary ally, and totally unable to avenge, either by diplomatic or openly hostile means, the perfidy of which it had been the victim. The strenuous labors which have heen made by the Court of Paris to concili-

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE GLOBE: att both of the rival Cabinets of Vienna and Official Election Returns of Cambria Berlin were, Louis Napoleon imagined, the happiness, this is sought to a great extent, in bably prove true respecting the latter, influthe accumulation of wealth. Now, although | enced as Frederick William IV is by Russia, am not of the opinion that happiness is al- and allying himself, as he will, to the friends of that power. The period, as appears from the news by the last few steamers, has very see no good or sufficient reason, because men | nearly come when the Anglo-Gallic alliance must end, and it will soon be seen with what correctness the plans of the French Emperor have been laid. There are indications, however, that he has grossly deceived himself in one particular, which may prove fatal to his true, we should take every honorable precau- future influence—that he has falsely judged tion to secure against loss or the dilemma of Austria by the past instead of the present, and that the Court of Vienna will be found bankruptcy, and he who fails to do this, enrolled on the liberal instead of the antistands in about the same situation that he liberal, on the commercial instead of the antidoes, who refuses to insure his house against | commercial side, in the strife for supremacy which is fast approaching.

Austria has, of late, under the influence of burned. The mariner would not think of the plebian element in the Cabinet of Franlaunching forth into the broad ocean, without | cis Joseph I, singularly changed in appearcompass and chart, by which to direct the ance, and been brought, in a remarkable decourse of his vessel, and thus insure her saferope. In 1848-9, there were two parties in ty. The business man's Books, if systemat- Austria; the one favorable to the simple suppression of the revolutionary movement, and the other strenuously advocating such material reforms as would tend to supercede the desire and necessity of revolutions. The young emperor threw himself warmly into the arms of the latter party, and the influence of its policy has been constantly increasing from that day to this. The first essential step was to retrieve the exhausted finances said to the contrary, it is just as great folly, of the Empire. It is well known by what to think that husiness can be conducted safeerate the exorbitant power of the aristocracy. In 1848, measures were proposed, by the revolutionary party, to suppress the feudal privileges of the nobles. The restored Imperial and compass. He may succeed in crossing | Government, far from reversing this progressive movement has continued to issue decrees, rendering all subjects equal in the eves of the law; the German civil code, resuscitated instruments, upon which safety so greatly in 1848, being confirmed in 1852. Restricdepends, yet, where, I ask, are those who tions commerce have been everywhere removed; a net-work of railroads has been pushed across Hungary; the annual exports of that kingdom have, within seven years, increased fifty per cent; and, under this liberal system, Austria has became annexed to commercial Europe, and Bohemia placed on the highway from the Atlantic to Asia. The free navigation of the Danube, was the grand aspiration of Austria, during the Eastern war. It was made an essential point at the Treaty of Paris, and is indispensable to the commercial prosperity of the Danubian provinces. To secure this, the Court of Vienna has insisted upon retaining troops in the Principalities, until Russia should have fulfilled the conditions imposed upon her .-It is because France is secretly conniving at violation of the obligation, by which the Isle of Serpent has been seized upon, and a wrong line of frontier drawn through Bessarabia, that discordant feelings have arisen between the respective English and French Ambassadors, at Constantinople. It is now France and Russia against England; but to the surprise and mortification of the two former powers, Austria has taken sides in behalf of free trade, and in favor of England. A POLITICAL PARSON DONE FOR .- The Lancaster Intelligencer, of yesterday morning, says:-The Reverend William S. H. Keys, formerly of this city (whom many of our readers will recollect for his bitter denunciations of the "Pope of Rome," in Centre Square, during the hey-day of Know-Nothingism, in 1854,) has had a true bill found against him by the Grand Jury of Blair county, for assault and battery, with intent to commit a rape! Just what might have been expected from a political parson!
