feelings, awakened new sentiments, and arousd all those finer feelings, that changes from dull to lively, are wont to do. It has been said that "variety is the spice of life," and truly it is. It is very pleasant to observe the contrast between this and my own State; not that I think this more beautiful, only in some respects; but I will not give my opinion of this State, until you know the beautiful State

My husband and I, started from a small village in the interior of the Buckeye State, last Monday morning, and novel was our ride that day; not only novel from changes of ther of them wrote nor authorized the publication of the scenery, but from the variety of human specie that crowded the cars. On this side, we were elated by the lively tones of a cosy little group, rendered laughable by the "rich Irish brogue," while on the other, "sweet German accents," hailed our ears, and perhaps, not few, were raw "Vairmounters," talking in high shrill tones, about the "wonderful fixins" of something connected with the cars; everything seemed to attract their attention; the most wonderful thing to them, was the engine, that was something that "beat them." One gentleman, with his family, a wife and three interesting children, attracted my attention a great part of the time. At every station we stopped, he would take those three children out of the cars, and walk to the engine, look over, under, and at the side of it, wondering, I suppose, how the tarnal thing ever was made; his wife would hear the same every time, "Wall if that don't beat me, that ar engine is worth a feller's money, just one sight of it. I'd jist gin a fip, to know how a feller ever made sich a thing as that," and too, he was very anxious the children should see all; every few minutes, you would hear, "you Peggy Ann, don't go to sleep, keep awake, and see all there is to be seen," and then, Theodore Alvin, keep still for mercy's sake, or you'll set a feller crazy;" finally, he made a compromise with them, by telling them he would buy "two cents worth of eandy at the next-town, if

Presently, the ly, that the bridge had been injured by high water, and we would all have to walk some few rods, after we crossed the bridge, where we would find two cars, one passenger and one baggage; we walked over through mud and water, crowded in hundreds of us, and rode in that way, seven miles, when we again halted. Another bridge washed away! Horror! had we to walk through the mud again? No, on looking up a hill, we saw carriages and wagons enough to contain all, and soon we were on our way; we rode two miles and again took the cars, where we remained until near midnight, when we arrived safely at

Pittsburg. We staid there, in that horrible, dismal place, two days, and left for this place. I was perfectly charmed with the scenery on this road; for miles its was completely embroidered with beautiful evergreens. Thousands of trees stood there almost unnoticed, while we value a. few, very highly, we hail The meeting was organized by appointing them as perfect treasures for our yards. I WM. P. Happy childhood! Those children little think this the most pleasant, the sweetest part this organization, we pledge ourselves to use of their existence. They see not, and know their path be strewn with pleasure's flowers, and their mission on Earth be performed to the joy of Him who assigned it to them. I am pleasantly situated in a village of your county, where I am stopping for a few days, and as I raise my eyes to the window, hills, that appear to me as great mountains, encounter my gaze on every side. I have often, in fancy, gazed on the cloud-capped summits of mountains, and very often pictured the stitution and By-laws, for the government of | mountaneous scenery of the East, but never were my anticipations so great, as my reality now is; fancy was nothing to the reality.

I think this country beautiful, very beautiful. Hills arising in every direction, with lovely valleys stretched between, renders it delightful; and brooks, clear as a crystal lined with evergreens, here and there pouring over some cliff, or bank, makes one think of young Niagara's. Bucks upon almost every other subject have been circulated among the people, except those relating to the very interesting and important one of Natural History. The books which have heretofore been published on this subject, have been adapted to mere children, or to those who made it a thorough study. Hence, very few of the millions of readers in this country have, within their reach, anything satisfactory upon this subject. This indicates a great and an obvious want, as no subject is more intensely interesting, and none more improving, than that of the living beings that people the globe. This want we are confident we fully neet, in the work we here offer to the public
