INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

calculations are at fault—the bare reference to a single consideration will be conclusive on this point. We at present enjoy a tranquility throughout our extensive and expanding country such as the world never witnessed. This trade is conducted on railroads and canals, on noble rivers and arms of the sea, which bind together the North and the South, the East and the West of our Confederacy.

ner with the war-making power, the corresponding duty is required that the United States shall protect each of them (the States) against invasion." Now is it possible to afford this protection to California and our Pacific possessions except by means of a military road through the Territories of the United States over which men and munitions of war may be speedily transported from the Atlantic States to meet and repel the invader.

STAND FROM UNDER.
A Queer Story.
The following story was told as an actual fact by a sailor, who solemnly affirmed that he knew it to be true:
I was on board a slave ship bound to the coast of Africa. I had my misgivings about the business, and I believe others had them, too.

ments intended to maim trespassers. Hesdin was as full of pitfalls and trap doors as a modern theatre; but they only served to penetrate the coarse though harmless jokes, in which fun of the Middle Ages consisted.

'Fountain Pen' which you thought would almost write letters of itself, cast aside as worthless. I told you it would be so when you bought it.
Here ended the chatter. Truth was uttered on both sides. Mr. A. was an earnest believer in human progress, and hence he gave every new invention an enthusiastic welcome. He scarcely stopped to put into practice his own counsels, in respect to the reasonableness of the new thing. His wife was at the other extreme; and these two are representatives of two classes of men and women at the present day.
