THE GLOBE:

Huntingdon, Wednesday, March 18, 1857. CORRESPONDENCE OF THE GLOBE.

HARRISBURG, March 16, 1857.

DEAR GLOBE: There has been a relapse of weather, several times within a few days. On Saturday morning, "emerging from a sea of dreams," folks opened their eyes (except at the blind institution,) upon streets and city roofs mantled with snow. Overhead was an unbroken arch of clouds. Yet the afternoon of the same day was levely as a scraph's (or baby's) smile. The atmosphere was bland and spring-like; and along the glittering sweep of Susquehanna, and far over the vales of Dauphin, the sky spread in sublime beauty, stained with no fleece of vapor in all its vast concave. The "ebon arch" that night, was full of stars of almost tropical brilliance. And Sabbath morning rose clear and fresh: but after another genial day, the sun went to his couch amid the tears of changeful March. This morning there is a breezy call in the air, and the soughing of the winds

"Foretell the coming in of storms." It is a day to meditate among the tembs; and, before breakfast, in a stroll along the river-side, I came to the grave of Harris; a pleasant spot; the same we see in the picture of his re-capture, where the meek old man stands lashed to a large mulberry tree, awaiting the death torch and final agony, when a friendly tribe of Indians hasten across the river in their canoes, and with a vell of triumph, rescue him from the hands of his savage judges. Above the roots of that tree, within an iron enclosure, is the funeral mound of the ancient pioneer. God rest his soul, with all the brave fathers of our Commonwealth! Some fifteen feet of the trunk of the old mulberry still stand, firm and undecayed as when it withstood the blasts of two hundred years ago. That part of the bark facing the west is chipped off, indicating the place where the victim was secured to meet the death doom.

Apropos of this, it is in dispute among certain wise-acres, as to whether the scene described ever occurred in the border life of Harris. Some say it happened to somebody else; and others to nobody. Among reasonable people, there can be little dispute as to the credibility of the story. It rests upon better evidence, anyhow, than the burning of Moscow and the existence of the Maclstrom. For my part, I have a disposition to cling to even the historical and geographical fables of our childhood time. I would not deprive the boy of another generation of the deep emotion that wells up in the young heart, as the imagination paints Napleon's army sternly going forth from the smoking Kremlin into the snowy wilderness. Nor would I still the wild throbbings of the pulse, as the little student, hereafter, shall dream of loaded ships, with all their screaming vetims, eddying down into the terrific suck of Norway. True, I never saw a maelstrom. Perhaps no one else did. Yet it is good to believe in it. In the main, I go for discountenancing the attempts of your dreadfully matter-of-fact fellows, to strip the golden olden times of the drapery of bright romance. There is too little of it now-a-days -scarce enough of poetry is infused into our readings, conversation and studies, to keep our children from growing mentally slab-

My professional duties lead me betimes to the indoor life of Capitol Hill—the Executive Chamber, the rooms of Secretary Curtin, the State Library and the genial society of that excellent Democrat, Dr. DeWitt. And occasionally, for relaxation, I listen to the fragment of a speech in the Senate Hall, or take a seat beside some quondam schoolmate in the House of Representatives. The "congregated wisdom of the commonwealth" is made up of as fine-looking men as could well be collected together-gentlemanly and generous in their social intercourse-Pennsylvania can well afford to be proud of such sons, whose appearance lead us to question the gray-beard grumblings about ours being a degenerate race.

I see by your ever interesting journal, that latterly, you have condescended to notice the dog-chub of Altoona. It is not worth the powder. I never read that sheet myself, and scarce any one else does.

Consider my beaver as being raised in acknowledgment of your friendly mention of the Pennsylvania Magazine. All my efforts are directed that way now. Those of your readers who feel the need and good of a publication of this character, will be pleased to learn that we have articles on file from the polished pen of DAVID PAUL BROWN, from THADDEUS STEVENS, Judge BLACK, Senator again, as I intend making a report of all I BIGLER, A. W. BENEDICT, and other distinguished sons of our commonwealth. In due time, we shall be favored with letters from absent Pennsylvanians-a gentleman traveling in South America, another in Nicaragua, Gen. Allen in California, Jerry Wilson in Italy, a missionary friend in Palestine, and BAYARD TAYLOR in Siberia. Excuse this mention of my pet enterprise. In writing for the Globe, I feel myself in the presence of old familiar friends; and being well assured of their sympathy, am encouraged to report progress.

Politics in Harrisburg, at this date, do not seem to give any one much uneasiness. The re-election of HARRY MAGRAW as Treasurer, was got through with pleasantly, in a few minutes. There was some dissatisfaction contains five rooms. The first of which is men from Wilkesbarre.

Verily, the combination of such parties as the Know Nothing and Republican, is a practical illustration of the "contact of Yours truly,

MAX. GREENE.

HARRISBURG, March 13, 1857. Mr. Lewis: As you gave my last a place in your Banner of Democracy, and having some leisure time, I will write you another short epistle which you may insert in your paper or the stove, whichever you please. Nothing of much importance having taken place this week to write about, I will, after giving you an item or two of news, proceed to describe some of the buildings and places near here, and give some of their past history, which may be interesting to those of your readers who have never visited the capital. John B. Gough, who I stated in my last would lecture on temperance here this week, has taken sick in Ohio, and consequently did not come. The Senate and House of Representatives elected Henry S. Magraw, State Treasurer on Wednesday.-The American and Republican convention will meet on the 25th of March. It will be a conglomeration of the isms opposed to Democracy. Wilmot will most likely be their candidate for Governor. If he is nominated, Packer will no doubt be elected by a majority of twenty-five thousand. The weather this week seems to be a contest between winter and spring. Some of the mornings are as pleasant and sunny as May, and others cold and stormy. The town of Harrisburg was laid out in the year 1785; by Wm. Maclay, son-in-law of John Harris. It has ever since been a place of much importance, being centrally located -the general depot of the valleys of Juniata, Susquehanna and Cumberland. The first minister here, I believe, was Mr. Elder. On one occasion several Indians came down the river and hid themselves in ambush, intending to surprise and murder the inhabitants while at worship in Paxton church.-They came on Monday, and after waiting several days, they came to the conclusion that the congregation would not assemble, and went away. The congregation ever afterwards came to the church armed; and Mr. Elder, the pastor, always carried his gun into the pulpit. He was Colonel of the Paxton Rangers, whose duty it was to keep a look out for the Indians. The late Judge Bucher's father, who was a clergyman in Lebanon, was also a Colonel in the same kind of service. The Court House is a large brick edifice, which was erected in 1794. It was occupied for several years by the State Legislature. When the Judges of the Supreme Court came to Harrisburg to hold a court, sometimes one or two hundred people would go out on horse-back to escort them into town. The Chief Justice sat with his hat on while on the Bench, and was dressed in a scarlet gown. The county jail is a splendid affair of its kind, and provided with solitary cells. It is built in Gothic stylewas finished in 1841, costing upwards of $40,000. The State House is on an elevated spot. It is a large and splendid building, facing the river, to which there is a gradual descent. The main building is 180 feet front by 80 wide. The lower story contains the Chambers of the Senate and House of Representatives, and several smaller apartments. In the second story is the Supreme Court Room, Canal Commissioners' office and several committee rooms, and two large rooms appropriated to the State Library, comprising over eight thousand volumes.

I might go on to enumerate many buildings such as State Arsenal, Harris' stone building on Front street, Mount Airy Waterworks, and speak of the bridges spanning the Susquehanna, &c., but defer it until another time. Much might be written about this place, now the capital of the Keystone State, the confluence of several railroads, and one of the most thrifty cities in the Union, where not very many years ago stood the wigmam of the red man, and surrounding hills, now echoing the shrill scream of the steam engine, then resounding with the howl of the wild wolf and growl of the bear.

A New Cave Discovered.

Scottsville, Huntingdon county, March 11, 1857. MR. EDITOR: A cave has recently been discovered on the land of Mr. DAVID STONER, known as the "Three Spring Farm," in Clay township, Huntingdon county, about one half at the time of his detection at Salem, Ohio, mile west of Scottsville; which bids fair to rival anything of the kind in this or any other in your city contributed greatly to the arrest, country, both in magnitude and interesting as they completely flooded this section of curiosities. The mouth of the cave is on the top of a high hill, which commands a complete view of the village of Scottsville and the place of resort in summer time.

This cave, so far as it has been explored,

among the adherents of Jacob Dock, caused entered by a passage about two feet wide and by the absence of several members from their | eighty-five feet long, and from five to six feet seats; but they should be pardoned for remis- high, and descends with a steep grade, so ness, on the score that their caucus nominee that the first room is about fifty feet below

From this tined to put on record many similar cases of to the second room there are two passages, the shortest of which is about eight feet, the other is circuitous, leading past the entrance jecture"—probably some obscure individual of what is called the fifth room. The second room is about ten by five feet, and six feet high. From this to the third room there are two passages, through both of which a person must creep, about fifteen feet long. The third room is about twelve by six feet high. From the third to the fourth room there is but one (a very narrow) passage fourteen feet long. This room is small, being only about three by five feet and four feet high. The fifth room is to the right hand of the upper passage leading from the first to the second room, and is about three by eleven feet, and six feet high. There are other passages leading from nearly all the rooms into unexplored parts of the cave. These passages will require some work to open owing to the fallen rock and formations which obstruct them.

This cave abounds in curiosities formed by the water. In some places there are vast clusters of stalactites hanging down like icicles. In other parts there are large columns reaching from the floor to the top of the room. In the second room there is the resemblance of a mound about three feet in diameter and one foot high, with a column reaching to the top of the room; the column is six inches in diameter at the base and tapers nearly to a point at the top, evidently formed by the water. It would require too much space to enumerate all the curiosities of this vast cavern: many of which have been broken down by the thoughtless and carried away by the curious. Other important discoveries will no doubt yet be made.

The circumstances which led to this discovery are briefly these: In the summer of '56 Mr. John M. Plumm was plowing corn in the field, and in passing where the mouth of the cave is, his horse broke through the top of the ground, of which he took no further notice than to avoid the place. During this winter a fog was seen to rise from the hole made by the horse, and as there is no water on that part of the place, except in cisterns, and having tried for water unsuccessfully in other places, they concluded to open this place in search for water. Washington Kough was employed to make the search, and after sinking eleven feet came to the passage leading to the first room of the cave: and to him belongs the honor of first exploring this vast cavern which had hitherto evidently been unknown to man.

What is most singular is, that there is not the least sign of foul air in any part of the cave. Candles burn free and bright; and the air appears as pure and fresh after being in for two or three hours as when you first ONE OF THE CURIOUS.

Tribute of Respect.

At a meeting of the students of Mount Joy Academy, occasioned by the death of their late associate John P. Kerr, of Huntingdon, Thos. H. Blick was called to the chair and B. B. Porter appointed Secretary, when the following resolutions were offered and adopted:

Whereas, It having pleased the Almighty God in the wise but mysterious dispensation of Providence to remove from our midst our esteemed friend and fellow student, John P. KERR. Therefore, be it Resolved. That we regard with deep emotion, the sudden death of our late associate. Resolved, That while his superior intellect and elevated moral qualities gave promise of future usefulness and eminent success in life, his kindness of heart and gentleness of manner, endeared him to all with whom he mingled, and will cause him long to be held in affectionate remembrance.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the widowed mother, the brothers, sisters and relatives of our deceased friend, in this sad bereavement and humbly hope God will sustain and comfort them in their deep affliction and that their and our loss is his unspeakable gain.

Resolved, That as a testimonial of our respect for the deceased, a committee of four be appointed to accompany the remains to Harrisburg, and that we wear the usual badge of mourning during the remainder of

Resolved, That as an evidence of our sympathy a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family of the deceased and published in the Mount Joy Herald, the Lancaster Daily and Express, American Democrat and a Huntingdon paper.

M'Kim Arrested.

BLOOMSBURG, March 12th-3 o'clock, P. M.—McKim the murderer, has been arrested near this place, at a lonely tavern on North Mountain—the spot being designated as Long Pond, Luzerne county. The arrest was effected by Mr. Aaron Wolf, assisted by A. B. Koons. McKim was taken unawares, and made no resistance. He was brought to Bloomsburg jail, and now lies in that place.

To remove any doubts that this is the murderer, I have ascertained that he has upon his person every mark, as described by the Philadelphia Evening Journal, to lead to identification. On his road to prison he confessed that his name was McKim, and that he had been the companion of Norcross.

Upon his person there was nothing found of any value. This leads to the belief, that he escaped by giving a heavy bribe. There is no doubt but that the detectives who are

MAPS—700 ENGRAVINGS.—A HISTORY OF ALL NA-

TIONS,
From the carliest period to the present time, the history of every nation, ancient and modern, being separately given. By S. G. Goodner, author of several works of History, 'Peter Parkey's Tales,' &c.
It is believed that the above work will be very acceptable to the American public. It is the result of years of toil and labor, assisted in his researches by several scholars of known ability, and has been got up at a great expense by the proprietors. No pains have been spared in the execution of the Illustrations and Maps, which are prepared expressly for this work. Indeed, all the other historical writing of Mr. Goodrich, sink into insignificance, when expressly for this work. Indeed, all the other historical writing of Mr. Goodrich, sink into insignificance, when compared to this, the result of his riper and maturer years. It is admitted that one handred dollars could not purchase the same matter in any other shape, and the publishers confidently expect, in consideration of the great literary value of the work, the large sum expended in preparing it for the press, and the exceedingly moderate price at which it is offered, that it will be favorably received by every lover of good books. Many of our first scholars, divines and gentlemen, who have examined the work, have given it their unqualified approbation and commendation, which it richly describes.
