For the Farmer.

From the Germantown Telegraph.

Mr. Freas.-A few suggestions at this season, to those of my fellow agriculturists in re-. lation to the management of lands that have been cultivated in corn, may not be unimportant. It is a common practice to harvest this crop, by cutting it up at the roots, leaving the latter, and a portion of the stocks, in the soil. When so left, both the roots and the stalks attached, present a serious obstacle in the way of the after cultivation, diminishing, to a certain extent, the subsequent product, whether of roots or grains. The most economical method, perhaps that can be adopted, is to pull the plants from the soil, and detach the roots by the aid of a keen knife, or other efficient instrument, and convey them to the compost heap or hog yard .-This practice secures a clean surface, and renders the operation of plowing, harrowing, cultivating and hoeing, much more easy, and secures a much larger extent of surface for the occupacy of the crop. Before plowingwhether that operation be performed in spring or autumn-every vestige of spurious vegetation should be moved, and the surface rendered as clear as circumstances will admit. Stones, stumps, and all substances of a similar character, oppose a serious obstacle to the successful performance of all the more important operations of husbandry, and their presence should not, on any account, reir present allowed. Very more reallowed. Very more reallowed. Very more reallowed. Very more reallowed. There is also another important.

There is also another important where the farmer, from the Where Where Where That the farmer of flour, and the flour of flour, and the flour of flour, and second best do.

There is also another important where the farmer of flour, and second best do.

There is also another important of flour, and flour be allowed. Very little time is required to ance, rendering the texture fine and easily managed, and securing a more speedy decomposition of the manure when applied the subsequent spring. By careful examination, and from information of a most reliable nature, obtained from practical men during the last twenty years, I am irresistibly compelled to accord by suffrage to this practice, as being every way superior to every other method now in use; and this, I am persuaded, will be the conclusion of every one who carefully examines the subject. The finer the soil is made, the better adapted will it be to the Best tomato catchup, appear to be appreciated as it ought by most Second best do., our farmers. They seem to suppose that if land is plowed, it matters but little how it is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally is performed, or whether it be nine or coally in the on this point, will but make an experiment, they will have palpable evidence of the supeMechanical implements and Manufactures.

Mechanical implements and Manufactures. on this point, will but make an experiment. riority of fine over coarse tillage. To all such, I would say, as a friend, try it. Jethro Tull promulgated the doctrine that pulverisation alone would produce fertility, and that all that was actually necessary to secure the productiveness of any land, was to divide it into infinitismal atoms, in which condition it would, he contended, be competent to produce, indefinitely, any and every variety of vegetable required. But this subsequent experience demonstrated to be a fallacy. Still, the advantages f the careful comminution of lands intended for cultivation, were, at the same time, demonstrated to be very great, and his views, although deprecated in the main, were nevertheless adopted in part, especially by those who had heavy and tenacious soils, and who could well afford to bestow the labor necessary to reduce them to the tilth required. We Second best do., are all aware that garden beds receive far Best doz. winter apples, more thorough culture than lands devoted to field crops; that they are much more thoroughly plowed, to begin with, that they are worked till every lump is broken and reduced to that fineness of subdivision which renders it a fit medium for the finest and most minute seed. To this superior tillage, in a second best do., very great degree, we attribute the superior productiveness of lands under garden culture to those under field culture. It has been proven, by repeated and accurate experiments, that a fine, light surface acts as a non-conductor, and that all lands finely divided in their particles, are capable of withstanding the effects of draught and intense heat, for a much longer period than those which are not finely pulverised. Some practical men, assume to question this fact; but let any one try it, and he will soon see in bloom, 100 Rest variety of dahlas, 100 Rest variety of dahlas, 100 Rest bounet. 50 only making the trial, and will cost but a mere trifle. An Amateur.

Seed Corn.

As the Corn harvest is approaching, it may not be out of place to give a few remarks on the probable tendency that inc. proper cribbing has in destroying the ger-minating property of the seed. Farmers have not yet forgotten what a vexatious season was experienced in the spring of 1855, when not one-third of the seed planted came up. Numerous theories were set forth as to the probable cause of its failure to grow, but none appear so plausible as the one here On account of the extremely wet weather during the summer of 1855, an excessive flow of sap was produced in the stalk. As a natural consequence, an overabundant quantity of sap was deposited in the cob, and as the crop was harvested in the usual manner, and cribbed before it was thoroughly dry, when winter set in, the sappy matter in the cob was frozen—thus destroying the germ of the seed, and hence arose the difficulty. Now, to obviate this difficulty in the future it is only necessary for farmers to use a little care and fore-thought in the fall. Let them select their seed from the best stalks, and having it well cured, store it away in a dry, wam place for the winter. It is to be hoped that farmers will think of this matter, this fall, and save themselves some unnecessary trouble next season, to say nothing of the loss of time and exponse that would otherwise be incurred.
