Farmers, to sell their products, must accomodate the price to the general decline. Accordingly, at all the great central points of the West, grain has fallen in price. The necessity of economy, which four families out of every five is feeling, will tend still further to bring down wheat. The needy will be careful to avoid waste. larger number, are united to effect it. . . . From the Plite. Penusylvanian. A Remedy for the Times. Most of our factories, mines, and iron works have stopped. The mechanical trades are languishing. The number of people thrown out of employment, already alarmingly great, is daily increasing. The winter is approaching, and the small savings of our mechanics, artificers, and laborers—the most numerous class of the community-are rapidly diminishing. Before long the last hard earned dollar will be spent, the last article of furniture and clothing that possibly may be spared, pawned perhaps, and what then? They must live, they, their wives and little ones, and where and how are they to obtain the means of subsistence? Something must be done without delay. On this point all agree. What is it? Some of our cotemporaries appeal to charity-charity. private and public. But the distress is too general to be relieved by this means. Again there are those who could not be reached by charity. Their feelings of self respect forbid them to receive anything, save in payment of their labor. These feelings society is bound to honor; they form its moral foundation. Let society be careful not to lower the standard of human dignity. Employment, we repeat it, is the only solution of this problem. Coal is needed, shelter and clothing and all other necessaries of life are wanted in the same measure now as formerly and indeed in a higher, for the very reason that for some time past the production of them has been impaired. The true remedy lies not in retrenchment alone, nor in donations, however liberal the hand that extends and charitable the heart that prompts them. It lies in redoubled activity. It is absolutely impossible to meet the emergency in any other way, and whatever the conditions are of an instant resumption of work, they must be accepted. The changes in the relations of capital and labor which altered circumstances will devolve, should be promptly anticipated by mutual concessions. Compromises should be made in a rational and friendly spirit to the advantage of all parties interested. Production of the necessaries of life should not cease, for, it would superadd scarcity to the prevailing financial disorders. We must continue to mine coal, to erect shelter, and to produce fabrics, for, these things are daily used and consumed .-Under our system of paper inflation everything has been unduly enhanced. After the collapse of that system, its effects cannot long continue to influence our condition. A marked reduction of prices accompanied, or immediately followed upon its downfall, indicating the direction which our efforts for the restoration of the disturbed equilibrium of business ought to take. Rents have assumed under the stimulus of our system of paper expansion an exhorbitant height; they have to come down, because the system did.-Taxes must be reduced by greater administrative economy. The market price of provisions, of bread, meat, butter, vegetables must be lowered; clothing and all must become cheaper. This, indeed, will be the ultimate and inevitable result of the process that is going on under our eyes. True wisdom dictates not only submission to the inevitable, but often advises us to hasten its consummation. Once the equilibrium of values re-established, there can be no doubt, but that activity will be resumed. All will, then, be contented and prosperous again .-One of our cotemporaries proposes that the cities should appeal to the charitable feelings of the country population to assist their distressed inhabitants. We have little faith in the efficacy of such measures, for reasons already explained. We appeal to the common sense of our farmers, and their manly honor. We appeal to their reason, as we appeal to that of our manufacturers, merchants, workmen, mechanics and landlords. Let all

The question is simply one of time, only their holding out aggravates the present evils. Let landlords isfied with a reduced rent, rather, than submoving. This is, after all, only accelerating let them not be actuated by miserly considerations, and pay as they go along in cash turers must resume work. If they cannot wholly destitute of means. Let goodwill and for the purpose of a revival of business not member, that unless it be employed immediately, and unless the working classes be enabled to purchase with the proceeds of their labor their share of the abundance of our harvest, neither that abundance however large, or charitable actions of whatever description, nor any legislative devices imaginable will prevent an accumulation of evils during next winter that may baffle all efforts of control. Every day that work remains suspended adds to our difficulties. Prudence and humanity both dictate that we should do without delay what we will be forced to describe the suspended adds to be a support of the control of scription, nor any legislative devices imagiwithout delay what we will be forced to do

The extreme inclemency of the weather—the large amount of stock on hand—the want of classification of the same—the very limited premiums offered, and the lack of a discretionary power, placed us in rather a peculiar situation, nevertheless, as far as was in our power, in our judgment differing as individuals would necessarily do according to the nature of things, we hope that we have rendered justice to those most deserving, and also hope that those persons to whom we have not awarded premiums will view the circumstances in their proper light. The committee would strongly and respectfully recommend, that at some one of the Agricultural meetings, a sufficient time previous to the next annual exhibition, a committee time previous to the next annual exhibition, a committee time previous to the next annual exhibition, a committee be appointed from different parts of the county consisting of good practical farmers, and especially those who take an interest in good stock, and the improvement of the same, to make a list of premiums, and further that the committee appointed to examine horse stock be hereafter endowed with a discretionary power.

Lewis, for the "Globe" office, exhibited a large variety of mercantile and legal blanks, business cards, and handbills, which came more immediately within the divisions to which premiums were allotted. They were evidently copies of the custom work done at his office, all tastfully got up, and admirably executed, reflecting great credit on the office, and would compare favorably with the work of any office in our large cities.

N, FRS. B. WALLACE JAMES BELL.

Wm. Brewster, from the "Journal" office, had only a limited number of specimens, and those fancy and ornamental, being printed in colors and bronze, and evidently mental, being printed in colors and bronze, and evacually specimens printed as such; consequently less perfect than they could have been had a quantity been printed. They were all neatly displayed, exhibiting much taste, and some of the business cards were very beautifully executed. The only blank exhibited by Mr. Brewster was a Broad Side Deed, especially deserving of notice, as a fine specimen of blank printing, being certainly equal if not better than any blank on exhibition.

Under the circumstances, your committee, believing that the efforts of our printers to establish for their art a reputation for taste and beauty, are deserving of commenda-tion and encouragement, and accordingly make the follow ing award:
