Edward Everett on Agriculture. Hon. Edward Everett delivered an address before the New York State Agricultural Society, at Buffalo, on Friday, the 9th October. It closes with the following eloquent and instructive paragraphs:

A greater than Burke in this country, our own peerless Washington, with a burden of public care on his mind such as has seldom weighed upon any other person-conscious, through a considerable part of his career, that the success not only of the American Revolution, but of the whole great experiment of republican government, was dependent in no small degree upon his course and conduct -yet gave throughout his life, in time of peace, more of his time and attention, as he himself in one of his private letters informs us, to the superintendence of his agricultural operations, than to any other object. "It will not be doubted," says he, in his last annual message to Congress, (7th of December, 1796,) "that with reference either to individual or national welfare, agriculture is of primary importance. In proportion as nations advance in population and other circumstances of maturity, this truth becomes more apparent, and renders the cultivation of the soil more and more an object of public patronage.

Among the means which have been employed to this end, none have been attended with greater success than the estab-1799, Washington addressed a long letter to strives to give the counterfeit presentment. spiritual body."

the Presidency of the United States, both the deceased and the living, passed or are passing, their closing years in the dignified tranquility of rural pursuits. One of the most distinguished of them, Mr. Jefferson, invented the hill side plow. Permit me also to dwell the four great statesmen, of the North, the West and the South, whose names are the ornament of the last generation, Adams, Calhoun, Clay and Webster, who forgot the colossal anxieties, the stern contensions, the herculean labors, and the thankless sacrifices of the public service, in the retirement of the country and the calm and healthful pursuits of agriculture. One of these four great men pleasures; but I well remember hearing him say, with a radiant countenance, that there was nothing in the triumphs or honors of public life so grateful to his feelings as his return to his home in Carolina, at the close of the session of Congress, when every individual on his plantation, not excepting the humblest, came out to bid him welcome and to receive the cordial pressure of his hand. I was often the witness of the heartfelt satisfaction which Mr. Adams enjoyed on his ancestral acres, especially in contemplating the the heap, where they suppose they became trees planted by himself, thousands of which frozen: but this is not the usual cause; the are now scattered over the estate. While he ministered in this way to the gratification and service of other times, he felt that he was discharging no small portion of the debt which each generation owes to its successors. At Ashland, in 1829, I rode over his extensive farm, with the illustrious orator and statesman of the west; and as the "swinish multitude," attracted by the salt which he liberally scattered from his pocket, came running about us, in the beautiful woodland pas- | over with one foot of packed straw, and three ture, carpeted with that famous Kentucky | inches of earth. The straw will prevent blue grass, he good humoredly compared them to the office-seekers, who hurry to Washington at the commencement of an Administration, attracted by the well-flavored relish of a good salary. Mr. Webster, reposing on his farm at Marshfield, from the toils of the forum, and the conflicts of the Senate, resembled the mighty ocean, which he so much loved, which after assaulting the cloudy battlements of the sky, with all the seething artillery of his furious billows, when the gentle southwest wind sings truce to the elemental war, calls home his rolling mountains to their peaceful level, and mirrors the gracious Heavens in his glassy bosom.

One more suggestion, my friends, and I relieve your patience. As a work of art, I know few things more pleasing to the eye or more capable of affording scope and gratification to a taste for the beautiful, than a well situated, well cultivated farm. The man of refinement will hang with never-wearied gaze on a landscape by Claude or Salvator; the price of a section of the most fertile land in the west would not purchase a few square feet of the canvass on which these great artists have depicted a rural scene. But nature has forms and proportions beyond the paints.

Address, DUNBAR BROWNE, Advocate, Honorary Secretary C. A. A., has forms and proportions beyond the painter's skill; her divine pencil touches the landscape with living lights and shadows, never mingled on his pallet. What is there on earth which can more entirely charm the eye, or gratify the taste, than a noble farm? Victorines and Head Dresses are sold at prices, which defy competition, by FISHER & MCMURFRIE. It stands upon a Southern slope, gradually rising with variegated ascent from the plain, then can be had in town. Call and see them.

sheltered from the northwestern winds, by woody heights, broken here and there with moss-covered boulders, which impart variety and strength to the outline. The native forest has been cleared from the greater part of the farm, but a suitable portion, carefully tended, remains in wood for economical purposes, and to give a picturesque effect to the landscape. The eye ranges round three-fourths of the horizon over a fertile expanse-bright with the cheerful waters of a ripling stream, a generous river, or a gleaming lake-dotted with hamlets, each with its modest spire; and, if the farm lies near the coast, a distant glimpse from the high grounds of the mysterious, everlasting sea, completes the prospect.

It is situated on the high road, but near enough to the village to be easily accessible to the church, school-house, the post-office, the railroad, a social neighbor, or a travelling friend. It consists in due proportion of pasture and tillage, meadow and woodland, pasture and tillage, meadow and woodland, field and garden. A suitable dwelling, with everything for convenience and nothing for ambition, with the fitting appendages of stable, and barn, and corn bin, and other farm buildings, not forgetting a spring house with a living fountain of water—occupies upon a greatly lead to provide the provided process of the state of th gravelly knoll, a position well chosen to command the whole estate. A few acres on the front, and on the sides of the dwelling, set apart to gratify the eye with the choicer forms of rural beauty, are adorned with a stately avenue, with noble solitary trees, with graceful clumps, shady walks, a velvet lawn, a brook murmuring lishment of boards, charged with collecting over a pebbly bed, here and there a grand and diffusing information, and enabled by rock, whose cool shadow at sun set streams premiums and small pecuniary aids, to en- across the field; all displaying, in the real courage and assist a spirit of discovery and loveliness of nature, the original of those improvement." > KEEPING POTATOES IN WINTER.—Potatoes spoil in winter, if buried, from three causes. First and greatest, want of ventilation. Secondly, and nearly allied, dampness. Thirdly, and more rare, freezing. Farmers find most of their potatoes spoiled at the top of the heap, where they suppose they became frozen: but this is not the usual cause; the damp, foul, steamy air ascended there, and damp, foul, steamy air ascended there, and could not escape, and this spoiled them. A hole made in the top, with a crowbar, and closed with a wisp of straw, would have allowed egress to the confined air, and saved

The best way to secure potatoes out-doors, is to make large heaps, say 50 or 60 bushels: see that they are dry and clean, by digging before wet weather comes on; cover them all dampness, and the few inches of earth will favor ventilation. A farmer who raises many potatoes, and practices this mode, does not lose a peck, on the average, in 50 bushels.
