Taken in and done for.

It is the boast of the bloods of Arkansas and they play hard. Gaming is the recreation most indulged in, and the gaming houses of the western part of Arkansas have branded it with an unenviable notoriety.

One dark summer night, some years ago, I lounged, as a mere spectator, through the different rooms of one of them, watching the various games of hazard that were played. Some of the players seemed to have set their very souls upon the stakes; their eyes were blood-shot and fixed from beneath their wrinkled brows, on the table, as if their everlasteach other, not only in face but expression; both the physical and moral likeness was indeed striking. The other player was a young man, a stranger; whom they call a "green one," in this and many other parts of the world. His eyes, his nose, his whole physiognomy seemed to project, and to be capable of growing even still longer.

"Fifty dollars more," he exclaimed with a deep-drawn breath, as he threw down the

Each of his opponents turned up his card cooly and confidently; but the long visaged here laid his stake before them, and, to the astonishment of the three professionals won.

"Hurrah! the luck has turned, and I crow!" he cried out in an eestacy, and pocketed the

The worthy trio smiled at this, and recommenced play. The green young man displayed a broad but silent grin at his good fortune, and often took out his money to count it over, and see if each piece was good.

"Here are a hundred dollars more," cried the sylvan youth, "and I crow."

"1 take again cried one of the trio. The youth won again, and "crowed" louder this time than he did at first.

On went the game; stakes were lost and won. Gradually the rouleaus of the "crower" dwindled down to three or four dollars or so. It was clear that the gentleman in black had been luring him on by the best of decoys-success at first. "Let me see something for my money .--

Here's a stake of two dollars, and I crow!" But he spoke now in a very faint treble indeed and looked penitently at the cards.

Again the cards were shuffled, cut and dealt, and the "plucked pigeon" staked his last dollar upon them.

"The last button on Gabe's coat, and I cr-cr-. No, I'll be hamstrung if I do!" He lost this too, and with as deep a he bound whater heard, he rose from the green curse as I was a learn heard, he rose from the green

The apartment was very spacious and on the ground floor. There was only this one gaming table in it, and not many lookers on besides myself. Thinking the gaming was over I turned to go out, but found the door locked and the key gone. There was evidently something in the wind. At all events I reflected that, in case of need, the windows are not very far to the ground. I returned and saw the winners dividing the spoil, and the poor shorn " greenhorn" leaning over the backs of their chairs, staring intently at the money. The notes were deliberately spread out, one after another. Those which the loser had staked were new, fresh from the press, he said, and they were sorted into a heap distinct from the rest, They were two dollars, three dollar, and five dollar notes, from the Indiana Bank and the Bank of Columbus

"I say, Ned, I don't think these notes are good," said one of the winners, and examined them.

"I wish they wern't, and I'd crow," cried out the loser, very chop-fallen, at his elbow.

This simple speech lulled the suspicions of the counter, and he resumed his counting .-At last he took up his last note, and, eying it keenly, he exclaimed, in a most comphatic manner, "I'll be hanged if they are genuine!-They are forged!"

"No, they ain't," replied the loser, quite as emphatically. A very opprobrious epithet was now hurled at the latter. He without more ado, knocked down the speaker at a blow, capsized the table, which put out the lights, and in the next instant darted out of the window, while a bullet, fired from a pistol, cracked the pane of glass over his head. He had leaped into a small court-yard, with a wooden pailing round it. The winners dashed towards the door, but found the "green one" had

When the three worthics were convinced that the door would not yield to their efforts, and when they heard their "victim" galloping away, they gave a laugh at the trick played them and returned to the table.

"Strike a light, Bill, and let's pick up what notes have fallen. I have nearly the whole lot in my pocket." The light soon made its appearance.

While all this was going on, I stepped towards the window, but had not stood there long that they are born with skins like alligators | before I heard the clanking hoofs of a horse and strength like bears. They work hard beyond the paling, and a shout wasted into the room, "Sloped for Texas!"

> The worst part of the story remains to be told:—It was my horse on which the rogue was now galloping off.

The general character of the Scientific American is well known, and, as heretofore, it will be chiefly devoted to the promulgation of information relating to the various Mechanical and Chemical Arts, Manufactures, Agriculture, Patents, Inventions, Engineering, Mill Work, and all interests which the light of Practical Science is calculated to advance. It is issued weekly, in form for binding: it contains annually from 500 to 600 finely executed Engravings, and Notices of American and European Improvements, together with an Official List of American Patent Claims published weekly in advance of all other papers.

It is the aim of the Editors of the Scientific American to present all subjects discussed in its columns in a practical and popular form. They will also endeavor to maintain a candid fearlessness in combating and exposing false theories and practices in Scientific and Mechanical matters, and thus preserve the character of the Scientific American as a reliable Encyclopædia of Useful and Entertaining Knowledge.
