I HAVE NO MOTHER NOW.

BY MARR M----I hear the soft wind sighing Through every bush and tree, Where now dear mother's lying Away from love and me.

Tears from mine eyes are startling, And sorrow shades my brow, Oh, weary was our parting-I have no mother now!

I see the pale moon shining On mother's white head-stone: The rosebush round it twining, Is here like me-alone. And just like me are weeping Those dew-drops from the bough : Long time has she been sleeping-

I have no mother now? My heart is ever lonely, My life is drear and sad. 'Twas her dear presence only That made my spirit glad. From morning until ev'en, Care rests upon my brow. She's gone from me, to heaven-

FEMALE COURAGE.

THE GERMAN HEROINE.

November, a light snow, mingled with sleet, up close against the wall; the man, muttering was whirled about by the wind, and pierced imprecations, advanced a few steps, groping through every crevice of a little roadside inn situated between Hornberg and Rotweit, on ment, remounted the steps, agile and noisethe frontiers of the Duchy of Baden.

Two travelers, driven by the bad weather to the shelter of this humble hostelry, were forgetting their hunger and weariness in the comforts of a hearty repast of smoked beef.

Krettel had The hissing and roaring of a large stove contrasted agreably in the travlers' ears with the loud moaning of the North wind without, and disposed them still more to the enjoyment of the good things within.

The inn-keeper and his wife had, for their own domestic, a young girl of Baden whom they had brought up from childhood. Krettel, for such, was her name, was a host in herself; housekeeper and maid to her mistress, cook in the kitchen, valet-de-chambre to the stray visitants in the one best room, and groom in the stable—the hardy, active, and good humored German girl fulfilled all courage was nigh desertingher; for she knew the duties usually shared by a large estab- they could easily accomplish their project by Krettel only requested that the inn-door should be left open until her return; and taking a piece of charcoal, to prove on the morrow that she really had visited the spot. she walked towards the gibbet. When close beside it, she started, fancying she heard a noise; however, after a moment of hesitation, she stepped forward, ready to take to flight at the least danger. The noise was renewed. Krettel listened intently, and the sound of a horse's foot sruck upon her ear. Her terror prevented her at first from seeing how near it was to her; but the next moment she perceived that the object of her fear was fastened to the gibbet itself. She took courage, darted forward, and traced the cross. At the same instant the report of a pistol showed her that she had been noticed. By a movement swift as thought, she unloosed the horse, leaped on the saddle, and fled like lightning She was pursued; but, redoubling her speed she reached the inn-yard, called out to them to close the gate, and fainted away. When the brave girl recovered, she told her story, and was warmly congratulated on her courage and presence of mind. All admired the horse, which was of striking beauty. A small leather valise was attached to its saddle; Father Hoffkirch would not suffer it to be opened, except in the presence of the burgomaster.

On the morrow, which was Sunday, the inn-keeper, his wife, their guests, all set out to the neighboring town, where they intended, after service, to acquaint the burgomaster with the last evening's adventure. Krettel, left sole guardian of the house, was advised not to admit any one until her master's re-this young servant-maid having watched the party disappear, fearlessly set about her household duties, singing with a light heart and a clear voice some pious hymn which her kind mistress had taught her.

An hour had scarcely elapsed, when there came a knock at the outer door, it was a traveler on horseback, who asked leave for to rest a little. Krettel at first refused; but on the promise of the cavalier that he would only breakfast and depart, she agreed to admit him; besides, the man was well dressed and alone, so there seemed little to fear from him. The stranger wished himself to take his horse to the stable, and remained a long time examining and admiring the noble steed which had arrived the previous evening in a manner so unexpected. While breakfasting, he asked many questions about the inn and its owners; inquired whose horse it was, that had attracted his attention so much; and inshort, acted so successfully, that the poor girl, innocent of all deceit, told him of her late adventure, and ended by confessing that she was all alone. She felt immediately a vague sense of havingg committed some impudence, for the stranger listened to her with singular attention, and seemed to take a greater interest than simple curiosity.

The breakfast was prolonged to its utmost ength; at last, after a few unimportant questions the traveler desired the servant girl to bring him a bottle of wine. Krettel rose to obey; but on reaching the cellar, found that the stranger had followed her, and turning round she saw the glitter of a pistol handle through his vest. Her presence of mind failed her not at this critical moment. Krettel had not been many minutes esconced in her retreat when a fresh knocking resounded at the inn-door, and she perceived two ill looking men, who asked her what had become of a traveler who had been there a short time before. From their description of his appearance, the young girl immediately discovered that the person sought for was the person whom she had locked in the cellar; nevertheless, she thought it most prudent to make no admission on the subject. On refusing their request to open the door, the two men threatened to scale the wall. The poor girl trembled with fear; her lishment of servants.

Do Indians Swear?—This is a curious question, and the answer by Mr. Schoolcraft should put the white man to the blush. This gentleman, who has for many years closely studied the characteristics of the race, says: "Many things the Indians may be accused of, but the practice of swearing they cannot. I have made many inquiries into the state of their vocabulary, and nothing is more bitter or repreachful than match annemoosh, which indicates, simply, bad dog. They have terms to indicate cheat, liar, thief, murderer, coward, fool, lazy man, drunkard, babler; but I have never heard of an imprecation or oath. The genius of the language does not seem to favor the formation of terms used in oaths, or for purposes of profanity. It is the result of the observation of others as well as my own, to say that Indians cannot curse."

A New Dog Story.—A large dog had been accustomed to get bits of money from his master to go to a meat stall to get his lunch of fresh meat. One day, when change was short, his master gave Growler a piece of white paper, on which was an order for the meat. The dog, after much urging, carried it to the meat stall and received his food; and so for several days, when thinking one paper was as good as another, he would pick up pieces of white paper and carry them to the stall, without applying to his master. It was not long before a long bill came in from the meat dealer, who had such confidence in the dog that he did not think to look at the paper, and the dog himself was very fat. No arrest was made, and the dog occupies as respectible a position in society as ever.

SHE WOULD RIDE.—The Wheeling Intelligencer relates the following amusing story: A conductor on one of the railroads terminating here, met with a hard customer a few days since, and his experience verified the lines---

A fierce-looking woman got on the train,

"When a woman wills she won't, And when she won't she don't."

about ten miles out on the road, to come to this city. The affable conductor saw nothing remarkable in this, for fierce-looking females frequently "get on trains," but both women and men; whether fierce-looking or not, are expected to pay their fare. The woman in question flatly refused to comply with the usual demand, while she expressed her ability to "buy the conductor, and all the money he had stolen from the company within the past year." The conductor thought this was saying a good deal, but, with as few words as possible, (conductors are men of few words,) he demanded, for the third time, 'your fare," and then pulled the bell-rope, to put the would-be dead-head off. The train stopped, and the woman was conducted out upon the platform, and from thence down the steps, out upon the track. When the train essayed to proceed on its way the wo-man got aboard. Not wishing to put her off while the train was in motion, the conductor pulled the rope again, and again she was deposited on terra firma. When the train started she got on board as before, and again the train was stopped, and the tenacious woman handed gently down. This time a brake-man remained outside to detain her, thinking he could gain the train under way in advance of the determined passenger. But he was mistaken. The woman made the rear car almost as soon as the brakeman, and clinging to the railing about the platform, managed to climb up, and was a passenger still, in spite of their efforts. The train had now lost considerable time, and rather than lay him-self liable to the charge of brutally treating a woman, the conductor permitted this remarkable passenger to gain her point, and retain her seat to the end of her journey, when, strange to say, she paid her fare and marched off. We doubt whether a parallel to this instance of determination in a woman was ever recorded.

Animals and Men.

The lean, ill-fed sow and rabbit, rear, it has long been known, a greatly more numerous progeny than the same animals when cared for and fat; and every horse and cattle breeder knows that to over-feed his animals proves a sure mode of rendering them sterile. The sheep, if tolerably well-pastured, brings forth only a single lamb at a birth; but if half-starved and lean, the chances are that it may bring forth two or three. And And so it is, also, with the greatly higher human race. Place them in circumstances of degradation and hardship so extreme as almost to threaten their existence as individuals, and they increase, as if in behalf of the species, with a rapidity without precedent in circumstances of greater comfort .--The aristocratic families of a country are continually running out, and it requires frequent creations to keep up the House of Lords; whereas our poorer people seem increasing in more than arithmetical rate.— In Syke, though fully two-thirds of the population emigrated early in the latter half of the last century, a single generation had scarce passed, ere the gap was completely filled; and miserable Ireland, as it existed ere the famine, would have been of itself sufficient, had the human family no other breeding place, to people in a few ages the world.—The late Hugh Miller's Schools and School masters.

Be Polite.

It is said that George M'Duffie, of South Father Hoffkirch, the minister, their host, and some neighbours who had entered by pointed the muzzle out of the window, and One evening he was holding a calf by the ears while his mother was milking the cow, and a gentleman passing by, said: "Good evening my little son."

George answered, "If you get down and hold my calf for me, I will pull off my hat to vou."

A Good Joke.—A Prussian journal of the Lower Rhine tells a very good joke of a religious community thereon, who, appreciating the long and able services of their faithful minister, unanimously resolved, as a slight testimonial of the same, to present him this year of a bountiful vintage, each with a bottle of white wine. The minister, of course, duly sensitive to this delicate tribute of love and affection, as well as pretty proud of it, as an evidence that his ministry had not been altogether in vain, at considerable expense prepared, in his cellar, a huge ornamented cask, into which on the appointed day appeared every member of his flock to empty his bottle. But what was the surprise of the minister, as well as of the generous donors, on tasting from the now overflowing cask, to find that it was not wine but water! A strange thing, certainly, and of which we have no other explanation than this, that every member of the society were of the same idea, that one bottle of water would not be noticed in a whole cask of

The same object seen from the three different points of view-the Past, the Present and the Future-often exhibits three different faces to us; like those sign boards over shop doors, which represent the face of a lion as we approach, of a man when we are in front, and of an ass when we have passed.
