TRANSPLANTING LARGE TREES.

[From the Germantown Telegraph.] Mr. Editor:-As much has been said and written of late, with regard to the transplanting of large shade and ornamental trees, I propose through the columns of the Telegraph, with your permission, to give the public the benefit of my experience in the matter, having taken up, removed to a considerable distance, and transplanted with entire success, all of the following named varieties, viz: silver maple, sugar maple, horse chestnut, linden, poplar, willow and elm. The first variety can be successfully removed of a larger size, and with less care than either of the others. With many persons, the planting or transplanting of trees is supposed to be a very easy matter, and that little or no skill or care is required, their living depends upon chance. This is a great mistake. Much care is requisite, both in winter or summer planting, to insure success. My method has been as follows: For any of the above named varieties; of from six to ten inches in diameter, dig a trench of two feet or more in width, all around the tree, keeping eight feet from its trunk; dig deep enough to get below the principal roots, sloping in towards the tree; then with picks prepared for the purpose, remove the earth from the roots, being careful not to break or bruise any of them, especially any of the smaller ones. Thus you will see what strength the tree has; and if sufficient, leave a ball of earth, say projecting from the tree three feet, making the diameter including the tree from six to seven feet. If the earth is frozen, it will greatly facilitate the operation, and there will be greater certainty of the tree living, as a number of the smaller fibrous roots will remain undisturbed. In no case however should a ball of earth be left, unless frozen, or the tree has sufficient roots to retain it if carefully handled; for if the ball should break in loading or unloading, it frequently breaks the best roots. The roots that have to be cut, should be cut clean and not bruised. Having thus prepared the tree, back up your sled, if there is snow on the ground, or if the distance to be moved is not too great and over a lawn. Or back up your truck, (which should be built at least eight feet wide between the wheels:) the skids attached to the truck being as close to the tree as possible; then place rollers on the skids, and a short plank on the top of the rollers; right up your tree, and slide it on to the truck. This may be much more easily done with the aid of a windlass attached to the truck. Great care should be taken not to let the roots be exposed too long. Where a tree cannot be replanted the same day in which it is dug up, the roots should be covered with something thick, so as to protect them from the sun, air and frost; either of which is injurious to them. To receive the tree, a hole should be dag of two feet in depth or more, according to size of tree &c.. and not less than ten to twelve of tree feet. feet in diameter; fill up with good rich loom to such a height that the tree when planted will stand three inches higher than it formerly stood. More trees are lost by planting

Evergreens may be transplanted in the same manner, providing they are not over one foot in diameter, nor more than fifteen years old. In no case are trees grown in a forest worth the trouble and expense of moving. Evergreens require a light soil. A good substitute may be made by mixing a light loom with sand in equal parts. The loom should be rich. The top of the tree should in all cases be trimmed to correspond with the roots, (ever-greens excepted.) After the tree is planted, wrap the trunk, say ten feet above the ground, then place three wires leading out from the tree; fasten them into the solid earth by driving down pegs at equal distances from each other. Thus your supporters will have a neat appearance, and the tree will not be injured by rubbing against stakes. This being done, lay some boards around on the new ground, say two feet from the tree, place large stones upon them; these the tree, place large stones upon them; these striped Delaines, Barred and Fancy Delaines, Levella Cloth, Will help to keep the roots in place, and will help to keep the roots in place, and will and Prints of every description. also help to retain moisture.

them too deep, than by the non-observance of almost any other rule.

If the foregoing rules are complied with, I will insure success in ninety-nine cases out of the hundred. I might add a few words with regard to the propper season for transplanting; but my communication has already grown too long.

Respectfully Yours, Germantown, Feb. 16th, 1858. Landscape. Gardener.

CUTTING GRAFTS.

Scions for grafting can be cut at any time during the winter or spring, and if propperly preserved, are in a better conditoin than when permitted to remain on the parent tree until the buds have begun to swell. If cut when the ground is frozen, they can be preserved in the cellar in sand slightly moistened occasionally; or if the ground be not frozen, they can be stuck two or thre inches into the soil, and left there in perfect safety until needed.

We find it to be a good plan to stick the scions in the ground at the bottom of the tree from which they are taken, by which the name is safely retained. We have never found that cold weather following the cutting of scions and partially covering them with earth, to be the least detriment to them.

Under drain all wet lands. And do it properly, for drains not laid in the best manner, has well not be made at all.

THE NEW YORK STEAM SAW MILL AND MACHINE COMPANY, CAPITAL, TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS.

This company has been organized with the above capital for the purpose of supplying the demand for the COMBINATION PORTABLE STEAM SAW-MILL, and other improved machinery.

They have purchased the entire machinery business heretofore carried on by J. M. Emerson & Co., also the Montgomery Works at Yonkers, on the Hudson, near this city, and with the experience and facilities combined in its organization are prepared to furnish machinery of all kinds at more liberal rates, than has ever been offered at any at more liberal rates, than has ever been offered at any other establishment. The Combination Saw-Mill was patented October, 1856, and is now generally acknowledged to be the cheapest, and most practical, and efficient lumber manufacturing management.

most practical, and efficient lumber manufacturing machine in the world. A number of them are in successful operation in different sections of the country, Canada, Cuba, and South America, and wherever their merits have been tested they are being adopted by lumber manufacturers in preference to all other mills.

The following letter expresses the general opinion of those who are using the Combination Mill:

Messes, Emerson & Co.—Gentlemen: I have tried the saw-mill purchased of you, and will say that it performs well, and more than meets my expectations. I am well pleased with its performance. I set it up on a small stream that afforded constant water about as thick as my little finger, which was much more than sufficient to supply the boiler. We are able to cut 3,000 feet of beautiful lumber in 12 hours, with something less than one cord of wood. in 12 hours, with something less than one cord of wood.—
