A DISTRESSING CASE.—The Miffintown papers chronicle a distressing case of small pox, which developed itself last week, in the person of a young girl residing at Patterson .-She had been employed in the family of Adam Holliday as a servant. The fever usually accompanying this loathsome disease brought on delirium, under which she wandered off, tracted with William Beven for the purchase and could not be found for several days .-One night she remained out with nothing for shelter but a friendly hay-stack, and the pale moon and stars as her silent watchers. Returning to town, she concealed herself in the stable attached to the Central Hotel, where, by her groans and sufferings, she was discovered by Dr. James L. Kelly. The Doctor at once set about to have her properly cared for, and in the afternoon removed her to the coun-

An Old Man's Heroism.

Let us turn, says the Evening Journal, from the political excitements and selfish schemes of the hour, to contemplate an example of heroism in age. A venerable statesman is stretched upon a bed of agony at Washington. A virulent cancer is gnawing at his vitals. The disease is mortal—the moment when it shall still the pulse of life is alone uncertain. The incessant labors and excitements of fifty years of public activity have worn and weakened that aged body.-Under such terrible circumstances, the mass of men would plead for rest and languish through the days between them and the grave. But is has ever been the rule of this great man to toil. His whole career has been a wonder of energy and industy. His moderate mental gifts were, from his youth, assiduously cultivated. If he could not be the most brilliant man in our national councils, he was resolved to be one of the most useful, and he accomplished his purpose. On many occassions, during his Senatorial life, the vast stores of practical knowledge he had managed to accumilate were brought to bear to determine difficult questions in a way to benefit the nation. When the war of faction drove him from the halls which he had adorned, he did not whine over the ingratitude of republics, but devoted his talents with characteristic ardor to a work of immense magnitude and of the first importance to our legislators and the people. The work is still unfinished—and the old man, racked as he is with deadly agonies, labors with but little intermission, hoping only that his breath may linger long enough to enable him to vet-settled. give the work to his countrymen in a completed form. We are speaking of Thomas Hart Benton. The toiling and suffering statesman ought to have the profoundest sympathies of those to whom he is endeavoring to render an inestimable service. His most unrelenting political foes must yield their admiration to his indomitable spirit as the awful shadow of death approaches that bedside. All must be anxious to see his present desire gratified and his task finished before the dread summons arrives. Other hands may complete the mons arrives. Other hands may complete the the common strengthening means thrown in- hand. His old customers and the pul wited to call and see for themselves.

career. But when it is known that the aged statesman has so set his heart upon the work, who does not pray that the heroic toiler may live to see it a finished legacy to his country! Ho! all ye who are studying to "kill time." Turn your eyes to Washto a man of noble purpose.

JUNIATA.

The Threats of Disunion. In reply to one of the numerous threats and prophecies of disunion, which, now, unfortunately, are so common, Senator Crittenden, of Kentucky, a few days since, made the following truthful and eloquent remarks: "With all these arguments and views, and in almost every argument and controversy that I now witness on this floor, are mingled, to give them strength and point, other prognostics of the overthrow of this Government er threats against its existence. This is now

The eagle may be mortally struck in full | Union, while we would, I am sure, and the very gentlemen who use this language, would do all they could do to preserve and perpetuate the Constitution and the Union, there is not a day that we are not doomed to listen here, over and over again, to threats of its overthrow; predictions made, little prophecies thrown out, that to-day or to-morrow, or some day near at hand, this Government, is to be ington, and learn how precious a day may be no more. Sir, this is the most unfortunate and ominous sign that exists in the whole country, in my judgment. If such language can be familiarly used and thrown into every argument as a make-weight-as a dust in the balance-if these threats can be made, against the existence of the Union, and if they can have any effect upon the people of this country-then, indeed sir, we may well apprehend that it cannot last long. I hope it will last forever. (Applause from the galleries.)

"Yes, sir, and it will last much longer than gentlemen here, by continual repetition and reflection, and meditation, believe to be so near at hand; and it would last much longer, but for these meditations. They prize it so highly that the remotest danger effects them, and they forthwith begin to prophesy that its end is near at hand; or they are provoked at something which is done, which they think is adverse to the interest of the Republic and the Union, and then they threaten; but all this is promoting the very purpose and the very end against which, I know in their hearts they are-opposed, and with their hands would oppose. "We should do well, I think, to throw out of all our ordinary course of argument, these threats and these prophecies. I believe the Union is to live, not because I wish it, or you wish it, sir, but it is to live for ages. I believe it is enshrined in the hearts of the people, and they will be its sustainers and maintainers, even if we should be recreant to the part we are to act, and desire its overthrow. It is not in our power-thank God it is not in the power of the Senate, or of the Congress of the United States-to overthrow this Government, and I rejoice in it. (Applause in the galleries.)"

From Washington. [Correspondence of The Press.]

WASHINGTON, April 8, 1858. Despite the prophecies of the Union and other Lecompton organs, the House voted to adhere to the Montgomery Crittenden amendment without a solitary change from the vote of Thursday last. The vote was 119 to 111. Mr. Marshall, of Kentucky, had paired off with Mr. Bowie, of Maryland, who was absent; and if both had voted, the result would have been the same noble vote of Thursday last, of 120 against Lecompton, and 112 for

This morning it was reported about the city that, if the House adhere to its amendment, the Senate would do many terrible things—the utter annihilation of Douglas, Broderick, and Stuart, being the smallest and most good-natured of them. The House has done the deed, but the feelings of those who made these threats have calmed down, and they look upon matters as they are in a more philosophic mood, and entertain sentiments of a more enlarged Christianity than before, and I should not be surprised to see the steps in the pathway of right entered as far as the enactment into the law, at a very early day, of the Montgomery-Crittenden amendment itself.

I have just learned from a source of undoubted authority that the President is understood to be in favor of the House amendment, and that he has advised that the Scnate recede, and adopt it instead of its own bill. So far, some Senators have been stubborn in their opposition, but it is expected that they will relent. When this is done, against the same; one each from the counties | there will be an end of this vexed question of a State Government for Kansas, or, rather, it will be relieved of all its embarrassing and controversial parts.

Murder stalks in the midst of the community here, and outrages of every character are perpetrated daily. At night time, the streets are almost deserted, and those who go abroad go always armed with knife or re-
