Thomas Hart Benton.

We find a carefully prepared biographical sketch of this remarkable man in the New lowing:

Colonel Benton was born near Hillsborough, Orange county, North Carolina, March 14, 1782. His father died when he was eight years old; his early education was imperfect; he was for some time at a grammar school, and afterwards at Chapel Hill, the University of North Carolina, but finished no course of study there, as his mother removed to Tennessee to settle on a tract of land belonging to his father's estate. Thomas studied law, and soon rose to eminence in that profession. He was now elected to the Legislature, serving only a single term, during which he procured the passage of a law reforming the judicial system, and of another giving to slaves the benefit of a jury trial, the same as white men. One of his earliest friends and patrons was Andrew Jackson, at that time a Judge of the Supreme Court, and subsequently Major General of the State militia. Benton became his aid-de-camp, and during the war also raised a regiment of volunteers. It was from that service he derived the title of Colonel, which has clung to him through life .--Notwithstanding the close intimacy between Jackson and himself, which was of the most cordial and unreserved character, a rude and sudden rencontre took place (in Nashville, between Jackson and a posse of his friends on one side, and Benton and his brother on the other,) in which severe pistol and dagger wounds were given, and produced a rupture that estranged them for many years. After the volunteers were disbanded, Mr. Madison appointed Col. Benton, in 1813, a Lieutenant Colonel in the army ; but on his way to serve in Canada, in 1814, he heard the news of the peace and resigned. He now removed to Missouri, and took up his abode in the city of St. Louis, in 1815. There he devoted himself anew to his profession. Soon, however. engaging in the politics of the day he was led to the establishment of a newspaper, en-titled the Missouri Argus. In this position he was involved in many disputes and contentions. Duels were usual at that time, and he had his share of them with their unhappy consequences. In one of them, which was foreed upon him, he killed his opponent, Mr. Lucas, an event he deeply regretted, and all the private papers relating to which he has destroyed.

In 1820, with the organization of the Missouri State government, Mr. Benton was elected a member of the United States Senate, and remained in that body an active and conspicuous member till the session of 1851, (thirty years in the Senate,) when he failed of a re-election. As Missouri, however, was not admitted into the Union until August 10, 1821. more than a year of Mr. Benton's first term had expired before he took his seat .--This interval he occupied in acquiring a knowledge of the language and literature of Spain; and thenceforward, for many years, his industry as a student during his extra hours, seized from the early morning, and ap- cessions, monster barbecues, and long parades propriated from the night, form a most interesting feature of the economy and regularity of his personal habits. The results of the greatest advantage to him as a Senator, for having acquainted himself intimately with a mighty revolution in the form of a univerthe political, social, and religious systems, sal popular carousal, in which reason and and with the languages, laws, and literature argument were drowned in the swelling choof the governing nations of ancient and mod- | rus of ern times, his knowledge of every great subject involven in a Senatorial debate covered the history of man, and of his progressive | Buren's administration, which "the sober steps from the patriarchal institutions of the | second thought of the people" has confirmed Hebrews to the comprehensive civilization of | as a measure of wisdom, economy and safety our own day. The Senate had memory, rendered his conversation postively passed, some years before, as already men- charming, upon whatever subject they might tioned, a resolution condemning the removal turn. And upon the little trifles of every on the other hand, just passed, black lines were drawn around the aforesaid resolution of condemnation, and the words "expunged, York Herald, from which we gather the fol- by order of the Senate," were written across the face of it, and so the record remains upon the journal to this day.

But the rejoicings of the Democracy over the expunging resolutions were brief. The great revulsion of 1837 was upon them. In March of that year Martin Van Buren came into the Presidency as the anointed successor of Old Hickory. The bank rag and shinplaster inflation brought about by Gen. Jackson's pet bank system had reached its utmost tension, and the inevitable collapse was at hand. The specie circular of 1836, requiring all dues to the government to be paid in gold and silver, and the withdrawal of the government funds to be distributed among the States, had applied the breaks to the pet banks, and the result was a general contraction, a general suspension, and a general and overwhelming collapse. It was on the brink of this stupendous revulsion that the extra session of Congress of 1837 was resolved upon, and called by proclamation of the President. But the general crash came on in the "merry month of May," while the ex-tra session, with a view to the relief of the country, did not assemble till September .--Little, too, was done at this session, except the passage of a ten million loan, and a vain attempt to pass a bill establishing an independent or sub-treasury. The Administraion party in Congress, however, kept at this important bill from session to session till 1840, when they passed it through both Houses, and it was signed by Mr. Van Buren on the 4th of July, as a government declaration of independence against the banks.

Through all the various phases of this emittered financial contest Mr. Benton, in the Senate, was ever foremost of the advanced guard of the democracy, his grand idea throughout being not only the separation of the government finances from the banks, but the establishment of a universal hard money currency. Hence his soubriquet of "Old Bullion." His hard money speeches through all the desperate battles of this financial revolution, from 1829 to 1840, appear, in many instances, at this day, like the teachings of a prophet, although nothing more than the simple reasonings from cause to effect, with the principles of common sense as the touchstone.

The sub-treasury did not bring immediate elief to the country-immediate relief was beyond all human agencies ; and yet the people holding Mr. Van Baren, General Jackson and the Democratic party responsible for the hard times" brought upon the country, swept the party from power in 1840 with the force of a tornado. "Things cannot be made worse, and they may become better with a change," was the irresistible argument which carried the election of Gen. Harrison almost by acclamation. It was a political revolution without a parallel in the history of the world-a revolution effected by a universal carnival of spontaneous music-monster proof wild Indians, wild hunters, wild animals, beautiful girls, clothed in white and borne along in triumphal cars, log cabins on wheels, cider-barrels, canoes and coon skins. It was of Utrecht. In person, Colonel Benton was tall, muscular, and robust, and with a presence singularly majestic and commanding. His features were of the strong Roman mould, and their habitual expression was that of a selfposessed, self-relying positive, and resolute man. His marriage with a daughter of Col. McDowell, of Virginia, secured him an amible and exemplary partner, and the domestic associations of an extensive circle of influential families. Mrs. Benton died some four years ago. Of his four surviving children, all daughters, one is "our Jessie," the wife of Col. Fremont; another is the wife of Mr. Wm. Carey Jones, late returned from a government mission to Central America; another is married to a Mr. Jacob, a well-to-do farmer, of Kentucky, and formed one of Fremont's amateur mountain men; the fourth and youngest, some years ago was married to an attache of the French Legation at Washington, now French Consul General at Calcutta. In the important matter of religion, Col. Benton was, if not a member, a faithful attendant with his family at the New School Presbyterian Church, near his residence in Washington. Among the people of Washington he was esteemed as a citizen, and beloved as a neighbor and friend. With Benton, the last, excepting Cass and we may say Crittenden, of the compeers of Clay, Calhoun and Webster, is gone. If Clay was distinguished for the love of his friends, and Calhoun for the veneration of his disciples, and Webster for the admiration of the commercial politicians of the North, Benton was particularly distinguished for the esteem of those who knew him most intimately, and for the bitter hostility of his opponents who only knew him from his excusable egotism, and sometimes offensively harsh and imperious manner as a public debater in the Senate.

A Great Swindle Exploded.

Various parties have from time to time called at the Mayor's office, and complained that they have been victimized by the "Grand Consolidated Lottery," and exhibited three newspapers which puffed up the swindle, and had the means of drawing them into the snare. The newspapers were entitled The Benefactor, Jersey city, E. Cooper & Co., proprietors, 85 Wall st.; The American Monthby Ledger, J. H. Hall & Co., proprietors, 92 Wall street; and The Golden Era, Charles W. Morton & Co., proprietors, 102 Wall st. Mayor Tiemann directed Sergeant Birney to ferret out the swindlers, and seize all the lottery apparatus he could find.

The sergeant accordingly proceeded to Wall street, but no traces of the swindlers could be discovered within its charmed limits. The postoffice was then visited, where Sergeant Birney was informed that the letters addressed to the above firms were re-directed to Norwich, Connecticut. He started immediately for Norwich, and on arriving there, pounced upon the lottery men, and arrested fourteen of them, by the aid of the mayor and sheriff was found to consist of Wm. P. Petit and ers, viz: D. E. Sykes, Hiram Hazen, J. N. were arrested. The newspapers were full of urgent appeals to those who desired to ento the lottery, and were published monthly. One hundred thousand copies were issued, and sent all over the country, together with Grand Consolidated Lottery has been in operation for six years, and has cleared half a million of dollars for the proprietors. It is Mary Levi, Sarah Levi, 000 per day. The prizes were ostensibly to David Shaver, Peter Herring, Hannah Herring, turned to the patrons, and no prizes were ever received. There are now 3000 letters in the New York post office, addressed to different lotteries and gift swindles .- New York | L. Rumbler, Courier and Enquirer of the --th.

Power of any kind can be applied to the machinery, and this is Ruth Green, done directly with ordinary appliances. Six llenry Green, Elcazer Wallasters horse-powers suffice, though larger power Wm. Smith, Mary Kennedy & Hugh Coen, John S. Isett, be used. The necessity of erecting buildings cspecially for the purpose, which is in other cases a very great item of expense, James McWillin, is obviated, as any building in any locality Peter Wertz, Benjamin Brown, Daniel Shindell, will be found suitable. Considering the immense amount of grain annually raised and Samuel Kennedy consumed in this country, and exported in Wm. & John Patterso the shape of flour, it is impossible to overrate the value of this invention.
