For the Farmer.

Facts and Suggestions in regard to Care

There are things about the feeding, care and management of horses, which would at once be acknowledged in words, while in deeds these very methods of management are treated with utter neglect. To aid in banishing this pernicious inconsistency; to assist in making the care and management of borses more as they should be; to contribute to making both horses and their owners more generally sharers in the beneficial consequences which always follow from obedience to the requirements of right and reason, I submit a few suggestions, not so much with the intention of furnishing new information, as of calling to remembrance and giving fresh force to truths already known.

There is no better guide to the right manrally adopted. And it may be confidently tables-melons, squashes, cucumbers. &c. affirmed that the owner would be benefited by it fully as much as the animals of which he had the care. He would, at least, be in a great measure exempt from these troubles irregular or improper feeding; over-working, or something else which reduces the vital powers for the time being, or the general condition of the horse for a longer period. A horse in a low condition is certainly more liable to attacks of disease, especially when suddenly subjected to hard work, even though it should have at the same time higher feed-

One objection to the otherwise excellent practice of cutting hay, stalks, straw, &c., is that it does not give the horse or cow, &c., a fair chance for rejecting such parts as may be musty or otherwise injured and unfit for food. Care should be taken that nothing is ever used, either cut or uncut, which has been injured by mildew, heating, too much exposure, or in any other way. To force horses to consume hay, straw or other fodder, as the surest test of its power. It has done all that you which has been damaged, by cutting and assured me it would do; and others of my family and friends, having witnessed its effects, are now using and mixing it with more palatable food as meal, recommending its use to others as entitled to the highest &c., is at once cruelty and poor economy, for disease or loss is not an improbable consc-

Carrots are more profitable to a horse than any other kind of root. A pretty accurate observation has established it as a settled fact, that a mixture of two parts of oats with one part of carrots, or two feeds of grain and one feed of carrots in a day, will keep a horse in better condition than when grain alone is used. Few, comparatively, use carrots, notwithstanding that their excellence is generally

Very few seem to be aware of one disadvantage of grinding grain for horse-feed; namely, its tendency to heat and become mouldy or tainted. Grain ground into meal has several advantages above that which is unground; but it is liable to this one objection. To obviate it, let the meal be watched and stirred and spread when heating or mouldiness threatens; and, what is still better, let only a small quantity be ground at once .-Cor. Scientific American.

Trap for Sheep-Killing Dogs.

Make a pen of fence rails, beginning with four, so as to have it square, and as you build it. draw in each rail as you would the sticks of a partridge trap, until your pen is of sufficient height, say five feet. In this way you will construct a pen that, when finished, will permit a dog to enter at the top at pleasure, but out of which he will find it difficult to escape, should he have the agility of an antelope. All that you have to do to eatch the dog that has killed your sheep, is to construct the trap, where a dead sheep is left, as directed, as soon as possible after an attack has been made on your flock, put a part or the whole of a sheep that has been killed, in it. and remove the balance to some other field. In a majority of cases the rogue and murderer will return the succeeding night, or perhaps the next, and you will have the gratification next morning of finding him securely imprisoned.—Southern Planter.

SCRATCHES IN HORSES.—Many remedies have been proposed for this disease, and mild cases generally yield to a simple washing with soap-suds, and greasing with fried pork fat, but harsher medicines are sometimes required. A friend's horse had the scratches so bad that nothing seemed to do any good, until he applied a solution of copperas and vinegar, with excellent effect. It will kill the disease, when lard should be applied to heal the sore.

- A treadle attached to your grindstone will enable your man to grind his own knife, axe, scythe, or other implement. Attend:; it now.

Scrap Books.

F. T. R., of Ottawa county, Illinois, writing to the Agriculturist, adds the following note, containing an oft repeated, but none the less valuable suggestion: "Persons very often meet with items of valuable information in old newspapers that they do not keep on file. If all these scraps were cut out and laid carefully away, and when a sufficient number were collected (say once a month) were neatly pasted into a blank book, alphabetically arranged, they would, in a short time, form a valuable fund of information for future reference. In this way, an Agricultural Scrap Book, or a Housekeeper's Scrap Book might be made that would be in constant demand for recipes and other information, besides furnishing pleasant occupation for leisure hours."
