The farmer should not allow his cattle | Keep it always in a cool place. that are used on his farm work, to be seattered indiscriminately over his fields. In the most busy season it often happens that a great deal of time is lost in catchadd seven pounds of white sugar, and let ing working animals that are let out on them stand over night. Take the tomatoes pastures while the men eat dinner. In the heat of a hot day, as at noon, horses and oxen would do much better in the stables if supplied with green food. For such purpose no farmer should be without the necessary quantity of clover to be used as soiling. We do not refer to that grown on meadow land with grasses, but to clover produced on meadow land heavily manured. Such clover will be succulent, and while it furnishes a highly nutritive feed for working animals, it prevents them from having a desire to consume large quantities of water. Clover grown in the manner referred to, would produce the second season three crops. After each cutting it should be heavily top-dressed. If the pastures are bare from being over-stocked, or parched by the heat of summer, the cattle should be fed clover or other soiling. The value of it for increasing the quantity and quality of milk and butter, will soon be understood by any person who pursues such a course .---This system of practice has its influence in saving time. If the fences are bad, or that cattle roam in the woods, by the feeding of special green food in a particular place, thus causing cattle to conto in search of it, much time may be saved.— We know of a shiftless, disorderly farmer —and perhaps there are others as well as he—who drives his cattle three or four miles to be milked, often when above their knees in mud. He has several horses to -1 wilk cans growing rusty for place, thus causing eattle to come in want of use. He does not estimate the loss arising from such a practice. His cattle travel in coming home twice a day to be milked, and returning to the pasture, make four journeys equal to twelve miles ---when the roads are muddy the labor is much increased--the feet of the cattle become subject to disease-while traveling they are not feeding, and consequently not supplying the raw material from which to make flesh, milk, or butter-they dung on the road and its manurial effects are lost to the pasture-and in addition to shese losses, arising from carelessness or a want of "order upon the farm," the time of a man or boy is also lost in making the journeys referred to .--- [Working]

We wish that our farm readers, who are apt to consider earth-worms a nuisance, would read the following:

"The ground is almost alive with the common earth-worm. Wherever mould is turned up, there these sappers and miners are turned up with it. They are in_ deed, nature's ploughmen. They bore the stubborn soil in every direction, and render it pervious to air, rain and the fibres of plants. Without these auxilaries "the farmer," says Gilbert White, "would find that his land would become cold, hardbound and sterile." The green mantle of vegetation which covers the earth is dependent upon the worms which burrow in the bowels of it. What conveys a more definite idea of the magnitude of their operations, they are perpetually replenishing the upper soil, and covering with soft and fine material a crust which before was close and ungenial. They swallow a quantity of earth with their food, and having extracted the nutriment, they eject the remainder at the outlet of their holes .----This refuse forms the worm casts which are the annoyance of the gardener, who might be reconciled to them if we were aware that the depositors save him a hun-dred times more labor than they cause. Mr. Charles Darwin has shown that in thirteen years a field of pasture was covered to a depth of three inches and a half with the mould discharged from their intestines. They therefore play a most inportant part in the economy of vegetation, and we see why they teem throughout the surface of the globe."
