An Interesting Shetch.

THE ALARM;

--or--THE INDIAN AND HIS VISION.

Twas a cold stormy night in the fall of 1813, and Miner Spicer and his wife had drawn their seats in front of the blazing fire which roared in the large open fire place of their cabin, and were talking of absent friends. Together with his brother, Mr. Amos Spicer, he had removed from New London, Conn., to the neighborhood of Akron, Ohio, in 1811, and erected his log cabin in the midst of the forest, which was fast being thinned out before the strong arm of the new settler, and giving place to green fields and pastured lands. The hoarse meaning of the wind, as it sighed through the boughs of the trees, and the heavy pattering of the rain on the roof, served to lighten the comfort and increase the enjoyment of their chimney corner; and it is not to be wondered at, when we consider the subject of conversation, that they should sit long after the usual period of retiring in cozy chat, nor dreamed of the passing hours. A sudden stop to the colloguy was caused by the sound of a horse's hoofs approaching the door, and in a moment after a shout from without intimated that some one desired to attract the attention of the inmates of the house. Mr. Spicer arose, opened the door, and passed out into the night. He could recognize the outline of a man on horseback, but the darkness which shrouded all objects in gloom, prevented him from distinguishing the features or anything whereby he might guess at the character of his visitor. To his question of "who's there?" a volley of sounds were uttered by the stranger-as unintelligible to Spicer as so much Greek or Arabic. He was somewhat angered at such an attempt to answer his simple question, and told the other that he must speak English, or he would unhorse him. By this time his eyes had become accustomed to the darkness, and he was able to make out the stranger to be an Indian, mounted on a small sized, rough and wiry looking pony which, beside his master, bore on his back the careass of a deer. By signs, and a few words of English, the Indian was enabled to make Spicer understand that he wanted to stay all night with him. To this request a very reluctant assent was given, for an Indian warrior was not, at that period, the most pleasing and harmless guest a man could have in his house, and Spicer was not the warmest friend to the red man of the forest. However, the request had been made, and he would not even turn an enemy from his door on such a night; so he was bid to dismount and enter, while his horse was led to a large pig-sty near, which was the only semblance of a stable about the premises. The carcass of the deer was carried into the house, together with two rifles which the Indian bore. Spicer did not like the looks of his guest | west, for their consideration, and will be glad when the full blaze of the fire lit up his per- to receive any statement from them as to. son, and the fact of his being so well armed -for, besides his rifles, he carried in his belt a tomahawk and scalping knife—aroused his suspicion of the object of his visit. The Indian probably noticed this fact by the expression of his face, and rid himself of his weapons, which he placed in the corner with his rifles. Re-assured by this act, Spicer threw off somewhat of his reserve, and asked the applied. One piece of the land, about 14 other if he wanted any supper. Without replying in words, the Indian took his knife, and, going to the carcass of the deer, cut off two steaks, which he handed to Mrs. Spicer, who understood well enough what was expected of her. She accordingly put them 6½ tons of straw, (estimated) $6, over the fire to broil, and meantime laid the table with such other eatables as the cabin afforded. When the meat was sufficiently cooked, as she thought, it was taken from the fire, and thoroughly seasoned with salt and pepper, after the white man's method of cooking.

The Indian, who had sat in silence during the preparation of the meal, was called to eat, and drew up his chair for that purpose. But both Spicer and his wife noticed that he ate but a mouthful or two of the meat, with which, for some reason which they could not divine, he seem disgusted. Nothing was said by either party; and the table was cleared, as it had been spread, in silence. A skin was laid upon the floor in front of the fire for the Indian to sleep upon, and Spicer and his wife retired to bed in a room which adjoined the main apartment, and which, from the position of their couch, gave them a full view of the other room, together with the Indian, his arms, &c. The carcass of the deer had been laid by the side of the dresser, which was next to the door between the two one to the other would almost step over it. start in spring. Before going to bed, Spicer had taken care its use. His suspicions of his guest had not been entirely allayed, and although he was parties laid them down to repose, and soon nothing but the rain and the wind broke the silence of the night.

An hour had passed—it might have been longer, for he could only guess at the timefire had burned low, and only threw a faint | find it to be a fact.

light on the objects in the other apartment, yet he saw that he had partly risen from his pallet, and was in a sitting posture, leaning on one hand, and intently gazing into the room where he slept. Quietly nudging his wife, he found that she, too, was awake, and watching the movements of the Indian. Slowly and cautiously the latter raised himself to his feet, and, apparently satisfied that his host was sound asleep, he approached the corner where his rifle, tomahawk and knife had been placed. Here he again paused and look stealthily over his shoulder to see if all UABLE PREPARATION.

(Signed,)

DANIEL LATHROP & Co. cannot be described. Satisfied of the intentions of his guest, he was about to reach for his ride, but thought he would wait the further developement of his intentions. The slightest movement, even a change in their breathing, he knew, would alarm the warrior, and he lay therefore perfectly quiescent, but prepared to act when the time came for action. He saw the Indian stop, pick up his knife, draw it from the sheath and feel its edge, and in a moment more he was approaching the door to his apartment with a noiseless cat-like tread. Quick as thought, Spicer's plan was arranged-and that was, the moment the Indian crossed the threshold, to spring up and seize his rifle, and, as the other was only armed with his knife, he could shoot him before he could either strike a blow or reach his other arms. Another step would bring the enemy to the prescribed limit, and every nerve was stretched preparatory for a spring, when to his surprise, he saw him kneel, and after looking to see if all was still, cut a steak weighing about two pounds from the deer's haunch, and return with it to the fire. Here he raked together the coals, upon which he laid the meat until it was cooked to his satisfaction, when he devoured it with much apparent relish, and then laid himself down to sleep. It seems that Mrs. Spicer's method of cooking venison was not to his liking, and he had preferred to curb his appetite until he could cook it to suit his own taste. High seasoned food is as distasteful to an Indian as the same food raw would be to a white man. In the morning, after presenting Spicer with a haunch of his venison, the Indian explained his visit by saying, as well as he could by signs and broken English, that himself and father had lost themselves in the woods, and after covering his parent with his blanket, and hiding him in a hollow log, he had wandered in search of a shelter for himself, until he saw the light in Spicer's cabin.

Wheat and What It Costs.

We find the following statistics of the cost of a crop of wheat on a small scale, in the N. E. Farmer. It seems to be a fair statement, and we submit it to farmers farther "wheat and what it costs," in their region.

I send you the product and cost of a crop of spring wheat raised by me this year, on about 62 acres of land. In this account the labor is charged at its cost; labor of a pair of oxen is charged at 96 cents per day; horse the same; board of men at 331 cents per day; no manure charged, none having been acres, was never before plowed. I assume the value of the land to be $100 per acre. and the price of the grain to be what I think it is worth to me for consumption.

DOVER, N. H., Feb. 2d, 1857.

Prof. O. J. Wood & Co.—Gents: Within a few days we have received so many orders and calls for Prof. O. J. Wood's Hair Restorative, that to-day we were compelled to send to Boston for a quantity, (the 6 dozen you forwarded all being sold,) while we might order a quantity from you. Every bolde we have sold seems to have produced three or four new customers; and the approbation, and patronage it receives from the most substantial and worthy citizens of our yieinity, fully convince us that it is A MOST VAL.

and its effects were so wonderful, we feel it our duty to you and the afflicted, to report it.

Our little son's head for some time had been perfectly covered with sores, and some called it scald head. The hair almost entirely came off in consequence, when a friend, seeing his sufferings, advised us to use your Restorative; we did so with little hope of success, but, to our surprise, and that of all our friends, a very few applications removed the disease entirely, and a new and luxuriant crop of hair soon started out, and we can now say that our hoy has as healthy a scale and as Invariant a that our boy has as healthy a scalp, and as inxuriant a crop of hair as any other child. We can, therefore, and do hereby recommend your Restorative, as a perfect remedy for all diseases of the scalp and hair.

We are, yours respectfully, GEORGE W. HIGGINBOTHAM, SARAH A. HIGGINBOTHAM.
