THE GLOBE.

Huntingdon, Wednesday, Nov. 9, 1859 LOCAL & PERSONAL.

COWARDLY ASSAULT AT PETERSBURG.-We learn from reliable authority, the following facts, concerning one of the most brutal and cowardly assaults, at Petersburg, this county, that ever came under our observation, or ever was our duty, as a reporter, to chronicle. The perpetrators of such deeds should never go unwhipped of justice, and, moreover, it is a warning to parents, to inculcate into the minds of their children, the necessity of controlling their evil passions. Some time ago, a young man from Petersburg, named Joseph Olewine, about eighteen years of age, and boatman by profession, lived at Judge Stewart's, on Shaver's Creek. The family of Judge Stewart and Olewine got along pretty well, but he was very lazy about getting up in the morning. The family bore with it until "patience ceased to be a virtue," and one morning, David Stewart, also about eighteen, and youngest son of the Judge, went into Olewine's chamber, and attempted to pull him out of bed, when Olewine turned on him, and they had a regular "rough and tumble" knock-down. Nor did they stop until another member of the family interfered and parted them. As a natural consequence, Olewine left. Had the matter ended here it would have been well, but Olewine swore eternal vengeance against young Stewart, and said he would have his heart's blood, or something to that effect. On Tuesday night of last week, young Stewart attended a singing school at Petersburg, as also did Olewine, who is now living there with his parents. As soon as the school was dismissed, and all were on their way home, Olewine approached Stewart, and struck him with a stone in the side, which injured him considerably, and would have done further violence, but for the timely interference of an older brother of Olewine's, who was working at Stewart's mill, and who was in company with young Stewart. Having been thwarted in his design of killing his adversary, Olewine followed him up, and wanted to fight several times, but some one of the party interfered, until at last they thought the affray over, and started home, leaving young Stewart behind with Olewine.

with Stewart, he commenced abusing him again, and at last threw a stone, as Stewart supposed at the time, which struck him in the face, whereupon he "pitched into" Olewine, and was administering to him a severe castigation, when he "yelled like a trooper," and called to those in front to come and take Stewart off. Olewine's brother ran back and stepped in between the two to part them, when his brother made another thrust at Stewart with a knife, and cut a leader in his brother's leg, which caused him to fall as suddenly as though he had been shot. Olewine desisted when he saw what he had done, and walked quietly away. A buggy was procured, and young Stewart and Olewine's brother were taken back to Petersburg, to have their wounds dressed. At the time Stewart thought he was struck with a stone, a ghastly wound, penetrating to the bone, was inflicted with a knife, which bled profusely, and which was not discovered until he was taken to Dr. Orlady's in Petersburg, where the two wounded men had their wounds dressed and staid all night. Stewart will carry the mark to the grave with him, and it is thought Olewine's brother will either die from the injury received, or be a cripple for life. Olewine's father said it was a fortunate thing the boy cut his brother, or he never would have stopped until he had cut Stewart into pieces .-At last accounts, Olewine was still running at large. Should such a dangerous piece of humanity be allowed to go at liberty, and mingle with civilized people? But we forbear further comments, as the story speaks for

As soon as Olewine discovered he was alone

For a week past we have had most delightful, charming, bracing and health-invigorating weather. The nights, too, so beautiful, we are loth to retire. The moon shines in all her splendor and loveliness .-We almost wish we could enjoy such weather all the time. The season of the "sear and vellow leaf" surrounds us, and is paving the way for old Winter, with his whitened locks and firm yet steady tread. Are the poor protected from the storms of old Winter? is a question every one who has plenty and to spare of this world's goods, should ask themselves. We hope there is none in our midst, who are in want. We hear of none, and we trust there is none, and what's more, hope there never will be. Those who are blessed with plenty, should occasionally bestow a thought on those poor creatures who are destitute of money, and clothed in rags, with no shelter to protect them from the storm, if not assist them, and perhaps it would be the means of softening their hearts, and opening their purse strings, to relieve the wants of some poor, half-starved and neglected human being, thereby doing a kind act they may bless themselves for, all the days of their

We have just been the happy recipient of a complimentary ticket from two of old mother Eve's fairest daughters, who are both young and handsome, and withal, model types of the old lady herself, to the concert to be given in the Court House, on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings next, by Prof. Coyle and his class of young ladies and Misses, for which they will please accept our sincere thanks, with a wish that they may always retain the same sweet smile and always be the possessors of the same lovely and winning countenances, and that their pathway through this troublesome world, may be one of sunshine and happiness. We would add for our "devils," the junior, senior and XX, that they are extremely sorry they were absent from the office when the ladies called, as they were deprived of the pleasure of tipping their beavers in the latest and most approved French style, and making their most graceful bow. And we would further add, that the whole class will be a collection of stars, beautiful to look upon and to admire. Who can stay away from the concerts?

18 We are sometimes given to wandering, and on Monday night last, about ten o'clock, might have been seen a pedestrian wending his way toward Cemetery Hill. The night was one of grandeur and sublimity. We gained the summit, and gazed long and silently at the beauties of nature by moonlight. It was a grand spectacle. There among the living dead did we behold a sight rarely witnessed by human eyes, and one which beggars description. We thought of those of our friends who have gone before, those who were wrapped in sleep around us, and those who were yet astir, for the same purpose as ourself, perhaps,-that of 'admiring a beautiful and picturesque scenery. We retraced our steps homeward, and at eleven, P. M., penned this item. So much for a moonlight

A Suspicious Box .- On Friday evening last, we received from Harrisburg, by express, a small box. On opening it we found it to contain a dozen the fattest partridges we ever saw. They had been shot on the Connewaga Hills, by Maj. Joseph L. Poulton, who is a sure shot on the wing, and by him sent as a present to us. We hope he may always have good luck, and a dozen to spare occa-

which a list is given of the most distinguished of his predecessors in the book-making and piano-teaching profession—the date of their birth and death being not forgotten. Mr. Grobe is doubtless better posted in the matter of musical biography than any other musical man. We find, next, some excellent advice to teachers, which we should like to transcribe to our columns, had we space.—Mr. Grobe's admirable book is, on the whole, heartily to be recommended to the musical public.

From "The Daily Picayune," New Orleans.

"Mr. Grobe stands very high as a professor and teacher, and composer for the piano. The book he now gives to the public bears upon its face, to every experienced and practised eye, conviction that there is a valuable addition to the rudimentary musical lore of the country and the world. A better primary instructor in the art, and especially in the science of piano-playing, has never before been published."
