GREAT SPEECH

STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS, ON THE

HARPER'S FERRY INVASION.

U. S. CAPITOL, WASHINGTON, Jan. 23. SENATE. The galleries and floor were crowded this morning to hear Senator Douglas' speech .-The noise and confusion, during the morning hour, was so great that it was impossible to hear the reading of the clerk. At half past one o'clock, the hour fixed for the consideration of the following resolution, offered on Monday last by Senator Douglas: Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report a bill for the protection of each State and Territory of the Union against invasion by the authorities or inhabitants of any other State or Territory, and for the suppression and punishment of conspiracies or combinations in any State or Territory, with intent to invade, assail or molest the Government, inhabitants, property, or institutions of any State or Territory of the Union.

Mr. Douglas rose and said: On the 21st of November last, the Governor of Virginia addressed an official communication to the President of the United States, in which he said, "I have information from various quarters, upon which I rely, that a conspiracy of formidable extent in means and numbers, is formed in Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and other States to rescue John Brown and his associates, prisoners at Charlestown, Virginia. The information is specific enough to be reliable;" and again, " Places in Maryland, Ohio, and Pennsylvania have been occupied as depots and rendezvous for these desperadoes, unobstructed by guards, or otherwise, to invade this State, and we are kept in continual apprehension of outrage from fire and rapine. I apprise you of these facts, in order that you may take steps to preserve peace between the States."

To this communication the President of the United States returned a reply, from which I read the following sentence:

"I am at a loss to discover any provision in the Constitu-tion or laws of the United States which would authorize me to take such steps for this purpose." [To preserve the peace between the States.]

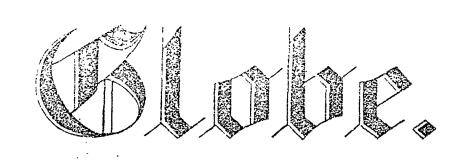

This announcement produced a profound impression upon the public mind, and especially in the slaveholding States. It was generally received and regarded as an authoritative declaration that the Constitution of the United States confers no power upon the Federal Government to protect the several States of this Union against invasion from the other States.

I shall not stop to inquire whether it was the meaning of the President to declare that the existing laws conferred no authority upon him, or that the Constitution authorized Congress to enact no laws which would authorize the Federal inter-position to protect the States from invasion. My object is to raise the inquiry and ask the judgment of the Senate and the House upon the question whether it is not within the power of Congress, and the duty of Congress under the Constitution, to enact all laws which are necessary and proper for the protection of each and every State against invasion, either from foreign Powers or from any portion of the United States. The denial of the existence of such a power in the Federal Government has induced an inquiry among conservative menmen loyal to the Constitution and devoted to the Union-as to what means of protection they have if the Federal Government is not authorized to protect them against external violence. It must be conceded that no community is safe, and no State can enjoy peace or prosperity, or domestic tranquility, without security against external violence .-Every State and Nation of the world, outside of this Republic, is supposed to maintain armies and navies for this precise purpose .-It is the only legitimate purpose for which armies and navies are maintained in time of peace. They may be kept up for ambitious purposes, for the purpose of aggression and foreign war, but the legitimate purpose of a military force in time of peace, is to insure domestic tranquility against violence or aggression from without their respective limits. The States of this Union would possess that power were it not for the restraint imposed upon them by the Federal Constitution. When that Constitution was made, the States surrendered to the Federal Government the power to raise and support armies; to provide and maintain navies; and not only surrendered the means of protection from invasion, but consented to a prohibition upon themselves, which declared that "no State shall keep troops or vessels of war in time of Were their hands thus tied by the Constitution? and were they thus stripped of all means of repelling assaults, or maintaining their own existence, without a guarantee from the Federal Government of the Union, to protect them against violence? If the people of this country shall settle down into the conviction that there is no power in the Federal Government, under the Constitution, to protect each and every State from violence, from aggression, and from oppression, they will demand that the cords be severed which thus bind them, and that the weapons be restored to their hands with which they may defend themselves. This inquiry involves States against invasion from foreign countries, the question of the perpetuity of the Union. The means of defense; the means of repelling | time, to make any law for the protection of assaults; the means of providing against invasion, is a necessary condition for the safety | in the limits of the Union. Columbia—including every inch of ground within our limits and jurisdiction—against foreign invasion. In the eight section of the first article of the Constitution you will find that "Congress shall have power to declare war, &c.,; Congress shall have power to raise and support armies; Congress shall have power to proling forth the militia, to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion." These various clauses confer upon Congress the power of using the whole military force of the country for the purposes specified in the Constitution. First, they ovide for the execution of the laws of the nion; second to suppress insurrection.— The insurrections referred to are insurrections against the authority of the United States, insurrections against State authority being provided for in a subsequent section, in which cases the United States cannot inauthority. The invasion which is to be repelled under this clause of the Constitution is an invasion of the United States. The language is, "Congress shall have power to proof Virginia, within the District of Columbia, within the Territory of New Mexico, or anywhere else within the jurisdiction of the United States. The power to protect every portion of the country against invasion from foreign nations having thus been specifically conof the several States by Federal authority.—

I will read the 4th section of the 4th article of the Constitution: "The United States shall guarantee to every State of this Union a republican form of government; shall protect each of them against invasion, and, on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence."

The clause contains three distinct guarantees. First, that the United States shall guaranty to every State of this Union a republican form of government; second, that the United States shall protect each of them against invasion; third, that the United States shall, on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, protect them against domestic other section for having the mould, die, or violence, Now, sir, I submit to you whether it is not clear, from the very language of the Constitution, that that clause was inserted for the purpose of making it the duty of the act of invasion is criminal, the conspiracy to Federal Government to protect each of the invade should also be criminal. If it be un-States against invasion from any other State, lawful and illegal to invade a State, or to duty of protection, as against foreign nations, have been told that a notorious man who has had already been provided for. This clause occurs where there is a guarantee from the United States to each State, for the benefit land, Ohio, a year ago, that he had then in of each State, and necessarily for the protection of each State from other States, inasmuch as the guarantee had been given previously as against foreign nations. If any further evidence is needed to show that such is the true construction of the Constitution, it will be found in the forty-third number of The Fideralist, written by James Madison. Mr. Madison copies this clause of the Constitution which I have read, giving these three guarantees, and, after discussing the one insuring to each State a republican form of government, proceeds to consider the second, which makes it the duty of the United States to protect each of the States against invasion. In the prisons or penitentiaries of the State Here is what he says upon that subject:

"A protection against invasion is due from every society to the parts composing it. The latitude of the expression here used seems to secure each State not only against foreign hostility, but against ambitious or vindictive enterprises by its more powerful neighbors. The history of hoth ancient and modern confederacies proves that the weak members of the Union ought not to be insensible to the policy of this article."

This number of the Federalist, which I have quoted from, like all the others of that celebrated work, was written after the Constitution was made, and before it was ratified by the States, and with a view of securing its ratification. Hence the people of the several States, when they ratified this instrument. knew that this clause was intended to bear the construction which I now place upon it. It was intended to make it the duty of every society to protect each of its parts, the duty of the Federal Government to defend each of the States, and he says the smallest States ought not to be insensible to the policy of this article of the Constitution. Then, sir, if it be made the imperative duty of the Federal Government, by the express provision of the Constitution, to protect each of the States against invasion or violence from other States or from combinatons of desperadoes within their limits, it necessarily follows that it is the duty of Congress to pass all laws requisite and proper to render that guarantee ef-

While Congress, in the early history of the Government, did provide legislation which it is supposed is sufficient to protect the United or the Indian tribes, it has failed, up to this each of the States against invasion from withhow to account for this omission. I presume that the reason is to be found in the fact that no Congress ever dreamed that such legislaagainst invasion and violence from its sister States. That gives the authority to repel the invasion, no matter whether the enemies land within the limits sary and proper to insure protection and party. I am not making this statement for domestic tranquility to each State and Territhe purpose of crimination, or for partisan tory of this Union against invasion or hoseleffect. perpetrating such act. Look upon your statute-books, and I think you will find an enactment to punish the counterfeiting of the coin of the United States; one section of which provides for the punishment of a man having counterfeit coin in his possession, with an intent to pass it; and aninstrument for counterfeiting, with intent to use them. This is a familiar principle in legislative and judicial proceedings. If the was that clause inserted? The power and i several States with intent to do the act? We recently suffered death upon the gallows in Virginia, boasted, in a public lecture in Cleveexistence an organized body of men employed in running off horses belonging to the slave-holders of Missouri from that State: and pointed to a livery stable in Cleveland which was full of stolen horses at that time. I think it is within our competency, and consequently that it is our duty, to pass a law, making any combination or conspiracy, in any State or Territory of this Union, to invade another with intent to steal and run off property of any kind, whether it be negroes or horses, into another State, a crime punishable by indictment of the conspirators in the United States courts, as well as confinement or Territory where the conspiracy may have been formed. Sir, I would carry this provision of the law as far as our constitutional power will reach. I would make it a crime to form conspiracies with a view of invading States or Territories to control elections, whether they be under the garb of the Emi-Blue Lodges of Missouri. [Applause in the | candidate for United States Senator. Mr. repelling of an invasion when the invading which had been previously written and army shall cross the borders of the State. The language is that it is to protect the State against invasion, which, to use the language of the preamble to the Constitution, means to insure to each State domestic tranquility against external violence. There can be no peace, there can be no prosperity, there can be no safety to any community unless it is secure against violence from without. Why, sir, it has been a question seriously mooted in Europe whether it was not the duty of England—a power foreign to France—to pass laws for the punishment of conspiracies in England against the lives of the princes of France. I shall not argue the question of comity between foreign States. I predicate my argument upon the Constitution by which with the doctrine as being revolutionary and we are governed, and which we are sworn to obey, and demand that that Constitution be executed in good faith, so as to punish and suppress every combination, every conspiracy, either to invade a State, or to molest its inhabitants, or to disturb its property, or to subvert its institutions or its laws. I believe this can be effectually done by authorizing the United States courts, in the several States, to take jurisdiction of the offences, and accompany a violation of the law with appropriate penalties. It cannot be said that the time has not yet arrived for such legislation. It cannot be said with truth, that the Harper's Ferry case will not again be repeated, or is not in danger of repetition. It is only necessary to inquire into the causes which produed that outrage, and ascertain whether these causes are yet in active operation, and then you can determine whether there is any ground for apprehension that that invasion will be repeated. Sir, what were the causes which produced the raid in Virginia? Without stopping to adduce evidence in detail, I have no hesitation in expressing my firm and deliberate conviction

In furtherance of this article of their creed, you find a political organization, not only sectional in its location, but one whose vitality consists in appeals to Northern passion, Northern prejudice, and Northern ambition against Southern States, Southern institutions, and Southern people. I have had some experience in fighting this element within the last few years, and I find that the source of its power consists in exciting the prejudices and passions of the Northern section against those of the Southern section. They not only attempt to excite the North against Territory, or place within the jurisdiction of the United States? For what other purpose was that clause inserted? The power and eseveral States with intent to do the act? We of Northern Statesmen and the Northern people is, essentially, a triumph of the Republican cause. Hence, we have not only to answer their appeals to Northern passion and prejudice, and to prevent the desired effect. but we have to encounter their appeals to Southern men to assail us in order that they may justify their assaults upon the plea of self-defence. Sir, when I returned home in 1858, for the purpose of canvassing Illinois with a view to a re-election, I had to meet this issue of the irrepressible conflict. It is true that the his Rochester speech, and did not for four not given the doctrine that precise character, but the principle was in existence and had then been proclaimed by the ablest and most attention to a single passage from a speech to show the language in which this doctrine was stated in Illinois, before it received the name of the irrepressible conflict. The Republican party assembled in State Convention in June, 1858, in Illinois, and unanithe Constitution means more than the mere cepted the nomination, and made a speech, that speech:

"In my opinion it (the slavery agitation) will not cease until a crisis shall have been reached and passed. 'A house divided against itself cannot stand." I believe this Government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free. I do not expect the house to full, but I do expect it will cease to be divided. It will become all one thing or all the other. Either the opponents of slavery will arrest the further spread of it, and place it where the public mind shall rest in the belief that it is in the course of ultimate extinction or its advocates will mush forward till it shall extinction, or its advocates will push forward till it shall become alike lawful in all the States—old as well as new —North as well as South."

The moment I landed upon the soil of Illinois, before a vast gathering of many thousands of my constituents to welcome me home, I read that passage, and took direct issue treasonable, and inconsistent with the perpetuity of this Republic. That is not the individual opinion of Mr. Lincoln, or the individual opinion merely of the Senator from New York, who, four months afterwards, asserted the same thing, in different language; but so far as I know, it is the opinion of the members of the Abolition or Republican

They tell the North, that, unless we rally as one man, under a sectional banner, and make war upon the South, with a view to the ultimate extinction of slavery, it will overrun the whole North, and fasten itself upon our free States. Then, they tell the South, that, unless you rally as one man, combining your whole Southern people into a sectional party, and establish slavery all over the free States, the inevitable consequence will be that we will abolish it in the slaveholding States. This is the same doctrine held by the Senator from New York in his Rochester speech. He tells us that the States must all become free, or all become slave; in other words. that the South must conquer and subdue the North, or the North must triumph over the slways. Show me centralism prescribing South, and drive slavery from its limits. In uniformity from the capital to all of its prov-they must also fasten it upon the Northern States, I will read an extract from his speech to which I have alluded. He says: "It is an irrepressible conflict between opposing and enduring forces, and it means the United States must, and will, sooner or later, become either entirely a slaveholding nation, or entirely a free-labor nation. Either the cotton and rice fields of South Carolina, and the sugar plantations of Louisiana, will ultimately be tilled by free labor, and Charleston and New Orleans become marts for legitimate merchandise alone, or else the rye fields and the wheat fields of Massachusetts and New York, must again be surrendered by farmers to slave culture and the production of slaves, and Boston and New York once more become markets for the trade in the bodies and souls of men.' Thus, Mr. President, you perceive that the theory of the Republican party is, that there is a conflict between two different systems of institutions in the different States. Not a conflict in the same State, but an irrepressible conflict between the free States and the slave States. They will argue that these two systems of States cannot permanently exist in the same Union-that the sectional warfare must continue to rage, increasing in fury until the free States shall surrender, or the Slave States shall be subdued. Hence, while they appeal to the passions of our own section, their object is to alarm the people of the other section, and drive them to madness with the hope that they will invade our rights, and thus furnish them with an excuse to carry on their aggressions upon their rights. I appeal to the candor of Senators, whether this is not a fair exposition of the tendency of the doctrines proclaimed by the Republican party. The creed of that organization is founded upon the theory that, because slavery is not desirable in the free States, it is not desirable anywhere; because free labor is a good thing with us, it must be the best thing everywhere. In other words, their creed rests upon the theory that there must be uniformity in the domestic institutions and internal policy of the several States of this Union. Here, in my opinion, is the fundamental error upon which their whole system rests. I asserted everywhere, in the Illinois campaign, and now repeat, that uniformity in the domestic institutions of the different States is neither possible nor desirable. That is the very issue upon which I conducted the canvass at home, and it is the question which I desire to present to the Senate.

Was such the doctrine of the framers of the Constitution? I wish the country to bear in mind that when the Constitution was adopted, the Union consisted of thirteen States, twelve of which were slaveholding States, and one a free State. Suppose that this doctrine of uniformity on the slavery question had prevailed in the Convention, do the gentlemen on the Republican side of the house think that freedom would have triumphed over sla- ple of every State upheld to have just such invery? Do they imagine that the one free State would have out-voted the twelve slaveholding States, and thus have abolished slavery by a constitutional provision throughout the land? On the contrary, if the test had then been made, if this doctrine of uniformity on the slavery question had then been proclaimed, and believed in the twelve slaveholding States against the one free State, would it not have resulted in a constitutional provision fastening slavery irrevocably upon every inch of American soil, North as well Senator from New York had not then made as South? Was it quite fair for the friends of free institutions in those days to claim months afterwards. It is true that he had that the Federal Government must not touch the question, but leave each State free to do as it pleased, until, under the operation of that principle, they secured a majority, and guarded men of the party. I will call your then wield that majority to abolish slavery in the other States of the Union? Sir, if uniformity in respect to the domestic institutions had been desirable when the Constitution was there is no evil unredressed in this Union, for adopted, there was another mode by which it which the Union furnishes a remedy. Let could have been obtained. The natural mode | us execute the Constitution in the spirit in of obtaining uniformity would have been to grant Aid Societies of New England, or the mously adopted Abraham Lincoln as their have blotted out the State Governments, to laws necessary and proper to give full and have abolished the State Legislatures, and to galleries.] In other words, this provision of Lincoln appeared before the Convention, ac- have conferred upon Congress legislative powers over the municipal and domestic concerns of all the people of all the States, as well as agreed to in caucus by most of the leaders of upon the Federal questions affecting the whole that party. I will read a single extract from Union. And if this doctrine of uniformity had been entertained and favored by the framers of the Constitution, such would have been the result. But the framers of that instrument knew at that day as well as we know now, that in a country as broad as this, as long as it pleases, and abolish it when it with so great a variety of chimate, soil, and productions, there must necessarily be a corresponding diversity of institutions and domestic regulations adapted to the wants and and then this Union can endure forever as interests of each locality. They knew that our fathers made it, divided into free and the laws and institutions which were well adapted to the mountains and valleys of New England were but illy suited to the rice plantations and the cotton fields of the Carolinas; they knew that our liberties depended upon reserving the right to the people of each State to make their own laws, establish their own institutions and control them at pleasure, without interference from the Federal Government, or from any other State or Territory, or any foreign country. The Constitution, therefore, was based, and internal polity of the several States. The State had peculiar interests, requiring peculiar legislation, and peculiar institutions different and distinct from every other State .-The Union rests upon the theory that no two States will be precisely alike in their domestic policy and institutions. Then I assert that this doctrine of uniformity among the aomestic institutions of different States is rerugnant to the States, subversive of the principles upon which the Union was based, revolutionary in its character, and leading directly to despotism if it is ever established.

Uniformity, sir, in local and domestic affairs, in a country of this extent, is despotism order to show that I have not misinterpreted inces in their local and domestic concerns, it was that John Brown learned the lesson the position of the Senator from New York, and I will show you a despotism as odious which he practiced at Harper's Ferry. There and as insufferable as that of Austria or Naples. Dissimilarity is, therefore, the princi-ple upon which the Union rests. It is founded upon the idea that each State must necessarily require different regulations; that no two States have precisely the same interests, and hence do not need precisely the same laws. How can you account for this Confederation of States upon any other principle? What becomes, then, of this doctrine that slavery must be established in all the States, or prohibited in all the States? If we will only conform to the principles upon which the Federal Union was based, there is no conflict—there can be no conflict. All you have to do is to recognize and obey the right of the people of every State to have just such institutions as they please, without consulting your wishes, your views, or your prejudices; and there can be no conflict. And, sir, inasmuch as the Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress the power, coupled with the duty of protecting each State against external aggression; inasmuch as that includes the power of suppressing and punishing conspiracies in one State against the institutions, property, people, or Government of every other State, I desire to carry out that power vigorously. Give us a law-such a law as the Constitution contemplates and authorizes—and I will show the Senator from New York (Mr. Seward) that there is a constitutional mode of repressing the "irrepressible conflict." [Suppressed applause in the galleries.] I would open the prison-doors and tell those conspirators against the peaco of the Republic and the domestic tranquillity of other States, to select their cells, in which to drag out a miserable life, for the punishment of their crimes against the peace of society. Can any man say to us that, although this outrage has been prejetrated at Harper's Ferry, there is no danger of its recurrence? Sir, is not the Republican party still embodied, organized, sanguine, confident of success, and defiant in its professions? Do they not now boldly proclaim the same creed that they did before this invasion? It is true that most of them come forward and disavow the acts of John Brown at Harper's Ferry. I am glad that they do that. I rejoice that they have gone that far; but I must be permitted to say to them that it is not sufficient that they disavow the act, unless they also repudiate and denounce the doctrines and teachings which produced it. Those doctrines and those teachings are still being poured into the minds of men throughout the country, in the shape of specches, pamphlets, books, and partisan presses. The causes which produced the Harper's Ferry invasion are now in active operation. Is it true that the people of all the border States are required by the Constitution to have their hands tied, without the power of self-defence, and to remain impatient both day and night under a threatened invasion? Can you expect a people to be composed when they dare not lie down to sleep at night without first, like a sentinel on duty, marching around their houses and buildings, to see if a band of marauders are not approaching with torch and pistol. Sir, it requires more patience than a free man should ever show to submit to a state of constant annoyance, irritation and apprehension. If we desire to preserve this Union, we must remedy every evil within the Union and in obedience to the Constitution. If the Federal Government fails to act, either from choice or from an apprehension of a want of power, it cannot be expected that the States will be content to remain unprotected. I see no hope, therefore, of peace, of fraternity, of preserving good feeling between the different portions of the Union, except by bringing the power of the Federal Government to the extent authorized by the Constitution to protect the people of all the States against any external violence of aggression. I repeat, that if the theory of the Constitution shall be carried out, and the right of the pecstitutions as they choose, there never can be a conflict, much less an irrepressible conflict between the free and the slaveholding States. Then, sir, the mode of preserving the peace is clear. This system of sectional warfare must cease. The Constitution has given the power, and all we ask of Congress is to give the means. By indictment and conviction. in the courts of our several States, of these conspirators, we will make such examples of the leader as will strike terror into the hearts of the others, and there will be an end of this excitement. You must check it by crushing out the conspiracy, the combination, and then there can be safety. When this is accom-plished we will be able to restore that spirit of fraternity which inspired our Revolutionary fathers upon every battle-field, and which presided over the deliberations of the convention which framed the Constitution. Then we will be able to demonstrate to you that which it was made; let Congress pass all the complete effect to every guarantee of the Constitution; let it authorize the punishment of combinations or conspiracies in any State or Territory against the property, institutions. people or Government of every other State or Territory, and there will be no excuse, no desire for dissolution. Let us leave the people of every State perfectly free to form and regulate their own domestic institution in their own way let each of them retain slavery; just chooses; let us act upon that good old golden principle which teaches all men to mind their own business, and let their neighbors alone. slave States, just as the people of each may determine for themselves. Mr. Fessenden, of Maine, said he was somewhat at a loss to imagine the necessity for the resolution introduced by the Senator from Illinois. A committee had been appointed to investigate the Harper's Ferry outbreak, and he was willing to await their report. The Senator, however, apparently distrusting their capacity, had undertaken to instruct them in their duty, and availed himself of the opportunity to make a political the Union was founded on the principle of speech for political effect. His argument as dissimilarity in the domestic institutions and | to the power of Congress was nothing new. No Senator was more anxious than himself Union was founded on the theory that each to protect. States from invasion. On that point he agreed with the Senator from Illinois, but would wait the report of the committee. He denied that the Republican party was responsible for the Harper's Ferry invasion. There was nothing new in that charge. It had been made repeatedly here and in the newspapers. It had got to be a dogma of the Democratic party, and part of their scheme for the next campaign. It was intended to effect the fall election. Prior to 1854 the slavery agitation had been quieted. Both parties had declared for peace, when the excitement was renewed by the introduction of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, and kept up by the subsequent attempt to force slavery upon a free territory by force of arms. Then
