The morning of the 26th proving clear and propitious—after a period of stormy weather of longer duration than any we have yet experienced here—the fleet sailed, and on the afternoon of the same day east anchor n Warsaw Sound-a large bay which makes in south of Tybee Island. This is one of the numerous outlets from Savannah—the one through which the English steamer Fingal endeavored to make her escape—effectually blocka-ded by the vessels Seminole and Norwich. During the night soundings were made, and the next morning the gunboats entered Wilmington Narrows, a narrow channel which runs within two miles of Fort Pulaski, and nearly parallel with the Savannah river, which it enters about three miles bove Fort Jackson. Upon passing Fort Pulaski, great bustle and activity were observed, as if they were endeavoring to get a heavy gun to bear upon this channel, in orler to give us a salute as we passed, but our active little gunboats were out of range before their purpose could be recomplished. Following this river, which winds through flat, swampy lands, the gun-boats proceeded for a distance of five niles, when a row of piles was discovered, stretching from bank to bank, obstructing the channel, and preventing our further progress. Here the gunpoats came to anchor, and General Wright, who had accompanied the reconnoissance on board the Ottawa, dis-embarked two companies of the Sixth Connecticut Regiment to reconnoitre on each bank of the river, while he proceeded in a row boat to within a short distance of the Savannah, ascertaining the depth and position of the channel, and the nature of the obstrucions placed there. On the left bank of the river was a plantation and house, but the place was deserted, and no
