The gun-boats were the Van Dorn, the Polk, and another, name unknown. As the Federal rams approached, these boats were set on fire and turned adrift to act as fire ships against the rams, but the latter succeeded in avoiding them. Not having any guns, however, to cope with the battery, the rams returned. They learned, however, from the carpenter of the Van Dorn, who was captured, some twenty transports, were lying at point about sixty miles above the battery, and that it was for the pur-
