

The company, that filled the scene And slick and haggard-fair and brown-As summer suns had showered down Their tan-yard rays upon the face: Or shady lowers had stopt their pace 5. while some were dressed in purple fine And jewcled from Golconda's nume; nd wore authoritative micn, As o'er and o'er they paced the scene With ladies hanging on then arms. Arrayed in silks and wearing charm , Unsuited to the tragic role, That stried the fountains of the soul A Luger number seemed to be Attited in stuffs of less degree Of pride or taste-(or what you please To name all showing such as the-e;) And many thousands of the throng, In rags and squalor hore along A weary life, that scarce would pay A weary me, that searce about pay Its passage to eternity. Amid these motley scenes, were found Four million negroes, moving tound, With hat in hand or under arm ot caring for the dire alarm, That filled the hearts of men who own Such mints of gold in soul and bone Their pearly teeth and wooly hair And coal-pit faces-all were there-And with that everlasting grin, That lights the face from brow to chin Upon the stage this abon race Was largely in a special place And seemed to be, in every way Engrossing subject of the play Upon the air Arch-augels trod And thather spoke the voice of God Denouncing tyrants, who should plan Invasions of the rights of man ; While fiends, that rushed with howl and back. From deep perdition's dungeons dark. Were there with Liss and squark, which told, That powers of hell were all enrolled, To wage a war with deadly might dust truth and liberty and right dat Lak'a carnon shot resounds, and o'cr the stage the missile bounds At ence, the conversation stops And every man his logic drops The slave-pendaor is quickly shut, The master visits every hut-What all his Arric pewels stay. When goal and lash have ceased to play-to see that every slove he claims re-ting surely in his chains The sons of Ham and caughters, too Of dark and brown, and yellow hus New gather in a massive crowd, As black as threatening thunder cloud While round them, in encirching ring. A fatter race together cling, Determined they shall not estray In freedom's vile, polluted way, When scourge and man cle can hold Itamortal souls, in slavery's fold, And now a voice proclaims to all Who fill the stage, both great and small For these dear objects of our care, You cannon's roat disturbs the air; For right to lash them to their toil, We'll drench in blood our virgin son Bring on a carnival of hate; Ten thousand homes make desolate: With ghastly death, walk hand in hand, And cause with war, a peaceful land To arms-ye men who live upon the blood and sweat of African Destroy the structure patriots built And paint the sword trom point to hilt With crimson from the tide of life, Its blade will open in the strife Another part of this great stage Our passing notice must engage For twenty million people stand Astonished at the bold command; Who scarce can think that cannon's ioar A summons makes at freedom's door. Upon a vapor white as snow, That sways in beauty to and fro Amongst attendant ones as fine, Yet tinted with the golden shine, That mouning lends the fleecy cloud That spreads through air so light and proud. When on the mountain's sanny side Its wandering shadows slowly glide;

There stands a form of guant height Whose outlines shadow to the sight

As if they'r given to the eye
