Union League. BY J. L. A.

-Now rise to your feet, all ye loyal defenders, And stand at your post till the traiter's surrande The traiters at home, in the midst of our land, To think that a traitor presumes such a name: They are fighting the President's last proclamatic And trying to tear down the Administration. They say that the negroes will flood all the north, And the war will not end till they have the sway;
Will it be by giving the South their own way? They call themselves Union men—yes, that's their But do you believe them? No; neither do I. Did you ever know one to take part in the strife, Or to save our great Government, lay down his life!

A voice from the army still urges us on: Their letters denounce all the traitors at home : They say, while they're fighting, our Union to er The langs of the traitors are tearing it down.
