

GLOBE: The South is no longer silent on the political questions that agitate the North. Evidence is accumulating to show how deep-seated is the interest they exhibit, and the importance they attach to the issue. The country is perhaps familiar with the extracts from the Richmond Enquirer, recently appeared in our Northern papers, recommending a North by which General Lee might make capital for the Copperheads in Pennsylvania. The great rebel Captain is to "turn politician as well as warrior." He is not, however, to confine his arts to the so-called Confederate States. The theatre for his practice is to be on the soil of the Old Keystone. He is to "drive Meade into Washington, again raise the spirits of the Democrats, confirm their timid, and give confidence to the wavering." The avowed object is "to embolden the Peace party." It is to be a campaign for systematic and organized retaliation and punishment. The probable interference of the army of the Potomac in this programme is not taken into consideration, and although this might cause a change to come over the spirit of their dreams, it does not morally affect the hopes with which the invasion is to be undertaken.

There can no longer be any doubt of the true and natural allies of the Northern anti-Government party are to be found. The coming elections are to be carried—the Union candidates to be defeated—by the cooperation of rebel arms and Copperhead votes. There is a spirit of liberality that will be willing to extend to all opponents. I cannot profess to believe that there is no honesty among those whose political sentiments differ from my own. There may be Democrats who act conscientiously in opposing the measures of the Administration. There may also be honest Copperheads and honest traitors—honest in their over-riding desire for the eradication of patriotic principles, the extinction of national glory, and the subversion of the American Government. It is only the former, however, that can be punished by the influence of fair argument, the light of reason, and the logic of events. Can they heroically labor for the end which the rebels seek to obtain by assuming an offensive attitude? Can they aid by voice or vote in a cause, the success of which is to be insured by hostile bayonets? But aside from any action that open enemies may take in the matter, can a loyal man give countenance to their interests? especially when he has a plain exposition of those interests through their public prints?

The time has come when every one must decide on these questions. The armed traitors of the South have taken their position. He who is not willing to stand beside them, must go hand in hand with them, must arm himself on the side of the Government. He who is not for the rebels and the Copperheads, must proclaim himself for the continuation of the true, honest, and capable administration of Andrew G. Curtin.

Such being the construction that has attached itself to the question at issue, it is almost impossible to anticipate any other result than a glorious victory, as will give additional lustre to the page on which are already inscribed the names of Gettysburg and Fishersburg, Fort Hudson and Sumter, Morris Island and Chattanooga. The dark and swollen stream which seemed to stay the onward march of the Nation, has been fattened. Solid potum has been found. There remains but one step between us and the other side. That step rightly taken will lead us safely to dry land; while one false movement may bury us forever in the turbid waters!

The only division among loyal men is in regard to the means that shall be employed in suppressing this rebellion. Why shall we waste the precious hours, and endanger the Union, by quibbling about this measure or that measure? The President has given him for maintaining the integrity of the Union. How well this work has been done may be seen at every point around the limits of the Confederacy. There have been those who would have required him to cease such decisive measures for fear of spoiling the furniture inside, but still he continued notwithstanding their protestations. These men were not wanting in presence of mind to foresee the consequences that would have attended the course they solicited the President to pursue. They were actuated by a diabolical desire to see the signposts burn to the ground.

Our Chief Magistrate saw that the confederation was inevitable. He could not completely stay the flames but he could in part control their heat, and lead them to places where the destruction would be comparatively small. But in removing the burning and blackened embers, which seemed to give life and heat to the flames, he incurred from his old enemies the imputation of trying to pull down the house on their heads. This they knew to be false, for such was the enthusiasm they most devoutly prayed for, and seeing that this end was destined to be defeated, they at once raised the cry of "stop thief!" These men are the Copperheads of to-day. If Providence were to interpose in our behalf, and if divine laws were to be offered for the salvation of the Union, their party would relapse into infidelity. I will not attempt to detail the operations that are in progress in this army, preferring to let such intelligence go to the public through the proper channels, and at the proper time. But I will assure you that our gallant soldiers are moving forward to new scenes of glory. They are not to have a voice in choosing their civil rulers, but whatever may befall at home, the cause they love so well is supported on the field. If there were any means of obtaining the untried sentiments of the Pennsylvania troops, they would be so overwhelmingly for Curtin and the Union, that no Copperhead could ever look at soldier in the face. Mr. Editor: You will see from the heading of this letter that we have changed Camp, since my last. On Friday last (September 11th), we received orders to be in readiness to march on Saturday at 10 o'clock. All the necessary arrangements for a march were accordingly made. The men had three days rations issued to them, to be carried in their haversack, and three additional days were carried in the regimental wagons. There were a great many conjectures as to where we were going. Some thought we were going back towards Washington, others pretended to say upon good authority, that we were to proceed towards Fredericksburg, to guard the fords along the Rappahannock. These conjectures were, however, soon found to have no foundation; when at the appointed time for marching we took the road leading to Bealton Station. When we arrived at the station, we took the road leading towards Rappahannock Station. When we arrived near the Station, the order was given to encamp for the night. The march this day was not a long one, but it was exceedingly fatiguing on account of the intense heat. The roads were very dusty, which in addition to the warm sun, made the march a very unpleasant one. Three men of our Brigade died on the road, from the intense heat. The four companies in our Brigade all laid over for a rest, long before the order for encamping was given. Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, we again took up the line of march towards the Rappahannock, passing through the camp of the 1st corps. The men of the 1st Corps were all snugly fixed up in their camp with no signs of a move. The camps of the Corps were the most beautiful we have seen for some time in the army. They have very beautiful camping ground, on the immediate banks of the Rappahannock. The tents are entirely covered with pine boughs, so that nothing can be seen of them until you come quite near the camp. At the end of the streets the men put up beautiful arches of evergreen, which give the camp a very fine appearance. The camp of the 6th and 7th Wisconsin, were especially beautiful, which shows that the "back woodsman" know how to use timber and pine boughs. Crossing the river, which at this place is very narrow. We passed along the camp of the 88th Pa., Vols., belonging to the 2nd Division of the 1st Corps. This Division has been on the South side of the river ever since Buford made his last cavalry raid towards Culpepper. A strong cavalry force now took the advance, and the entire 2nd Corps with the cavalry moved off towards Culpepper. About 11 o'clock a sharp cannonade commenced in our front some four miles, as the cavalry drove in the pickets of the enemy. The cannonading was kept up all day at times being very heavy. The enemy being unable to withstand the impetuous charges of our cavalry, gradually fell back, followed up closely by our victorious cavaliers. By evening the enemy was driven four miles beyond Culpepper. All along the route of our march we saw testimonials of the severity of the cavalry engagements. Quite a number of dead horses lay along the road, and numerous tree tops lay upon the ground, having been torn off by solid shot from the batteries. As we approached Culpepper, we met a number of cavalry men, with three pieces of cannon taken from the enemy and a number of prisoners. Two were splendidly armed cannoneers, and the other was a brigadier general. The artillery was certainly good, but such miserable horses we have never seen. We have thought at times that the artillery horses in our army were led, but such dejected looking creatures we have never seen in our service. Forage must certainly be scarce in the "lugs" Confederacy. The crews must be as plenty in the South as they are in the North, or these horses would have been taken by them. The prisoners, however, looked much cleaner and better clothed than the majority of rebel prisoners generally are. Their clothing were apparently new. There were some quite intelligent looking men amongst them. Some appeared in high spirits, while others looked as ill-humored as they well could. We arrived near Culpepper about sundown, and encamped where we are at present. Culpepper is a fine looking place, larger than a majority of Virginia villages. The country is very level and beautiful around the town. There are some splendid residences in the country surrounding the town. A great many of the inhabitants of Culpepper remained at their homes. We have no doubt, however, that a great many more would have left the place but our forces came upon them so unexpectedly, that they had no time to leave. The country all along the line of march looks very desolate. We do not think that any grain has been raised of any consequence since the war commenced. From the Rappahannock river to this place, we only saw three families—all the other houses being vacant. What few inhabitants are here appear very hostile to our cause. Even the young who have not reached the years of maturity, appear to partake of the same spirit as those who have reached more mature years. As we were marching along the road on Sunday, we noticed a little white-haired old man of about five years old, very defiantly shaking his fist at us as he was standing in a half field. He decidedly showed fight—more so we think than some of his more elderly Confederate brethren. We have just received orders to march. I am not able to tell where we will move to.

Yours, PHILUM.
