Raised a far-mer, I followed that pursuit until the com-mencement of the rebellion, when on the 16th of Soptember, 1861, I enlisted as a private in the company of Capt. J. H. Wiptrode in the 53d Regt. P. V., commanded by Col. Brooke. I was engaged in the seven days battles on the Peninsula, at Antietam, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, and the intermediate fights, and on the 14th of October, 1863, a few miles from Bristow Station, Va., I had my right arm nearly shot off, compelling me to have it amputated close to the shoulder, a fow hours afterwards. I was then taken to the hos-pital in Alexandria, where I lay until March 1864, when I was transferred to the Invalid Corps, in which I remained until the 21st of August, 1865, when I was discharged. Hav-ing been made Orderly Sergeant, and it being a part of my daty to keep the rolls of the company, I did my writing with my left hand. Major, and the company which was formerly in the 195th regiment was transferred to the 192d, and ranked as Co. B. In the company were many boys far from the age of manhood, but we learn that they did their duty manfully, and their robust appearance, now, gives them credit to the title of little men. The roughest experience the boys relate was in marching, averaging in that rough and hilly country over twenty-three miles a day. The mon express a liking for their officers, and the officers in turn were pleased with the soldierly bearing of the mon. We welcome the young men to our midst again, and suggest that they be citizens.

Our Public Roads.

Now that farmers are through with the hard work of summer, something ought to be done toward repairing the public roads, and putting them into a passable condition. It is very seldom indeed that the roads are to be found in a worse plight than at present. Loose stones and ledges of rocks occupy the wheel tracks, and gutters and Union. gullies formed by the heavy rains still yawn before the traveller. As the country people suffer most from the bad condition of the roads they should see to it that their Supervisors put them in proper order before cold weather sets in.

The Southerners in Washington.

I have met many--and mark and make a glad note of it—a most healthful change in comparison with the firstcomers here. One of them described the condition of the Southern people by the following remark: "The Confederates are a good deal like a very sick man.
