Past, Present and Future.

The year 1865 came and has gone and is now numbered with the things of the past. It has been the most eventful year in the history of our nation In the beginning we were in the darkwas lowered upon us; the balance of give it to the Government. Fate was equally poised, and each side [No. IX.] fully arrayed awaited the decision of Fortune. A quarter of the year rolled away, and the aspect of military affairs assumed an encouraging change; the contesting armies met and fought the most decisive as well as most sanguinary battles; the foes of the government were discomfitted and compelled to surrender-the great General Lee and the flower of Southern chivalry first, and Johnston and his war scarred veterans shortly after. Then throughout the North for the well mourning went up for the loss of our unto the thousands who had erred and celebrate the death of slavery. What vast revolutions the rebellion national influence and power and un-
