[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Feb. 5.] A Haunted House.

Witchcraft and Sorcery Redivivius. Spirits of Evil on the Rampage. Mysterious and Inexplicable Affair.

Readers of newspapers are seldom called upon to peruse detailed accounts of supernatural occurrences. Superstition went out as the printing press came in, and yet we have a plain, circumstantial account of a seemingly su pernatural affair to lay before the readers of The Inquirer this morning. We say seemingly, because we believe that there is some trickery in the case. though thus far it has baffled detection

In South Fifth street, in the old District of Southwark, stands an unpremainder of the building is occupied as but saw nothing in transition through the dwelling place of the proprietor of the air. Not liking to have the ornamental furniture destroyed, the pictures and mirrors were unhung, and placed upon the floor. But this did not deprive the location of the premises. The exthem of their powers of locomotion, citement was so great that High Con-One large looking glass took a zig zag flight across aroom, brought upagainst an opposing wall, and was smashed out of all the semblance of a respectable reflector. It was a night of horror to the afflicted inmates of the haunted three story brick. Next morning their plates immed from the dresser and plates jumped from the dresser, and by the so called spirit than those menpintes jumped from the dresser, and dashed themselves to atoms against floor, walls and ceiling. The morning meal had to be partaken from the laps of the haunted people. where they still remain. The master and mistress of the family being communicants of the Baptist Sunday night and yesterday for the Church, imparted the circumstances of front third story bed room, the sitting their strange visitation to their Pastor, and on Saturday evening that gentleman, accompanied by another clergyman, went to the haunted dwelling to

Soon after he entered the parlor a hymn book was projected from a table

Both the clergy man present did their est to discover some trick by which the inanimate objects were made to circumnavigate rooms in so mysterious a manner, but in vain; they could discover no clue to the mystic movements.

Many other mysterious manifesta tions took place on Saturday evening a writing slate was projected against the ceiling and broken to atoms; the model of a boat was sent sailing through the air, and finished the aerial voyage by a violent buttagainst the wall. The well known picture of the late President dent Lincoln and his son Tad, was ta-ken from a nail on the wall, by the unseen force, sent diagonally across the room with great swiftness, and dashed against an opposite wall with such force as to break the glass, crushing the pictures into minute pieces. Over this picture hung a green baize bag, such as legal men carry; the picture, although hanging under the strings of the bag, was removed as stated while the bag itself was undisturbed. Λ young gentleman present who expressed himself an unbeliever in supernatural phonomena, was roughly jostled by strong, though invisible hands. The violent manifestations continued for bout three hours when they ceased. Yesterday morning they bogan again. A servant of the family while cleansing the dishes, had a tumbler fly up from the wash pan and strike her riolently in the forehead, leaving an ugly mark in the shape of a flesh wound The keys flew from out the locks of the doors; the few remaining dishes threw violent somersaults from shelves to floor. A last attempt was made to set the table yesterday for the Sunday dinner in vain; the plates jumped off the table and went to atoms against floor and ceiling, so the hapless family ato their Sabbatical dinner from their

A daughter of the family, on her return from church yesterday, on entering the parlor, had her bible torn from her hands with such force as to tear the covers entirely off.

Even the bread became endowed with life, and went spinning over the table in the most eccentric manner. During yesterday afternoon there was comparative quiet; there were rumbling noises, but no movements of intending three story brick house; the animate objects. About this time a young man, an acquaintance of the family, proceeded up to the third story front room, followed our Reporter, in order to observe the status of things. It was found that a number of books, which had a short time previous been carefully piled on, a bureau, had been displaced, and strewn about the room in all directions, but no person happened to witness the said books in transit, and the spirit had all the fun to himself.

Shortly afterwards, while several of the family and our reporter were seated in the kitheen, waiting for developments, a heavy crash was heard up stairs, accompanied with the violent screams of two or three young ladies. Here was something, thought our re-porter. Up stairs everybody ran and met the screaming young ladies running down, with unutterable horror depicted on their countenances.

The front third story room was entered again, and it was found that a large washstand, containing washbasin and various other articles, had been thrown violently to the floor, and the basin broken into a dozen pieces. The young ladies stated, as soon as they recovered from their apparent fright, that the washstand was upset before their own eyes.

Our reporter was still without any ocular demonstration, and sadly wanted to be enlightened in that respect. He was told that if he felt disposed to enter either of the haunted rooms alone, and quietly take a seat, he would be almost sure to see some physical manifestations, as in each case where par ties had done so they had seen enough to make them beat a hasty retreat At the risk of getting his "head punched" he took the hint and proceeded to the kitchen in the basement, where an old gentleman had seen enough to convince him, a short time before, and who loft in haste for more congenial quarters. Our reporter took a seat in the room all alone, in the confident expectation of seeing or feeling something not accomplished by mortal agency, but he was disappointed, for the spirit didn't come to him. About this time a large number of spectators, shaking and talking mediums, &c., began to arrive to investigate the phenomena in their own pleasant style, and after witness, ing their mummeries for some time our reporter left.

Electricity, unlike Modleine, is capable of producing all the changes necessary to cure any disease, when applied from proper polarities. The following are among the diseases our systems of practice has proved especially successful in curing.

There were strange knockings in the ceiling and walls. There was no more sleep for the family that night.

With daylight they became call, but while the lady of the house was placing the breakfast dishes, a sancer sprang from the table, flew against the wall, and was broken into a dozen fragments. The members of the household, who are not over nervous, partook of their morning meal, and commenced the business of the day.

On Friday night the annoyances began again; doors flew open with great violence, an ivory ornament jumped from a table through a pane of glass, and elattered on the pavement below. The mantle ornaments again became erratic, and chased over the floor; pictures became loosed from their fastenings, and flew across the rooms with remarkable velocity, at times dashing the glass to pieces, and damaging the frames, and in other instances sustaining no damage from their transit and sudden stoppage.

Not liking to have the ornamental furniture destroyed, the historical stage of the surposed departed spirit in their midst, wore literally run down all day with photographs.

The only theory advanced thus far by the superstitious to account for the outbreak of these mysterious manifestations is that they are caused by a lady who boarded in the family for some months, and left the house on rather ill terms with its inmates. This woman is reputed to be a spiritualist, and it is said by some that she has conjured the evil spirits into the house. Those in the immediate neighborhood who profess spiritualism are considerable exercised over these manifestations. The mantle ornaments again became erratic, and chased over the floor; pictures became loosed from their fastening the glass to pieces, and damaging the frames, and flew across the rooms with remarkable velocity, at times dashing the glass to pieces, and damaging the frames, and in other instances sustaining no damage from their transit and sudden stoppage.
