As to the views of President Johnson on the great topic of the day we think that the mass of the people coincide with him. He understands what he says, and his experience, being a lieves real estate from State taxation, is that the die on the left hand corner Southerner, qualifies him to speak knowingly. He desires to leave the settlement of the question, however, with the people, and here is the dividing difference between him and the extremists. While he looks to popus lar settlement, they wish to force it upon the people without their consent. We shall await further developments, but expect to see renewed denunciations from his opponents.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9, 1866. The following is the substance of a conversation which took place yesterday morning between the President and a distinguished Representative, which called onehim: beach The Representative said some perons felt, and others would, probably, for personal or factious ends, endeavor o show that the President was taking sides against the colored people, or was at least less favorably disposed towards them than he had been.

The President responded that no one could fairly and truthfully do that. He was now what he had always been, the friend of the poor and the lowly. He had never broken faith with anybody, and if his past course and his former language were not a sufficient guarantee that he meant well to ward the colored people and would endeavor to secure to them a fair chance, nothing he could say or do now would give any such guarantee. He thought, however, that it was best to speak plainly, and he did not be-lieve that the effort now making by some who call themselves the negroes special friend to force universal suffrage upon the States, was wise or ju-dicious. He thought it tended to embitter feelings, while our effort should be to cultivate calmness and confidence. He believed it would result in burn and Felix Rayburn, went to the residence of Alexander Magrew on the rosidence of Alexander Magrew on the the residence of Mexander Magrew on the whether Mr. Douglass and his friends in his crib, awaiting his return from expected him to talk to them; but he thought it best to take the opportunichurch, with the intention of waylay. thought it best to take the opportuning and killing him. Mr. Magrew did ty to state his views. He would repeat that he was, if he knew his own heart, the colored man's friend He had great faith in the people, and

The Representative then said that some persons might take or profess to take the President's speech as an indication that he was at variance with his party friends, and that some othone of the incendiaries, Magrew and ors might endeavor to found upon it the charge that he was preparing to go over.

The President smiled, and answered that if the party which opposed his election indulged in any great expectations on that segre they were likely to be disappointed. He might differ The Yazoo (Miss.) Banner, of the the Union party as to the means to be with individuals of what was called used, but he considered himself in general accord with that party, as a whole, in the ends to be reached. He was not a party man, and he meant to sink the partisan in the patriot. But so far mules were the property of Capt. John as he understood the sentiments of the Union party, he was in general accord with it

The Representative finally, after further conversation, said something about the distribution of offices, about Executive patronage.

The President remarked that he was the servant of the whole people, but he could not entirely forget by what party he had been placed in his present position, and supported in the administration of the duties entrusted to isfied with the position the President long since properly punished. Our had taken, nor were they backward in first object should have been to mark While he had hold of the gun another tention of being found outside. He intended to exercise his own judgment, but was ready to yield it when he found it was not sustained by the judgment of the people. 19 John Bright, in a recent speech, speaking of the multitude of the poor n England, and their hopeless condition, uses the following language: "There are amongst them one million—considerably more than a million, I believe, in the United Kingdom-of those who are classed in the unfortuconcerning the President's speech of nate list of paupers. There are at least Wednesday to the negro delegation a million who are just above the paupers-always in peril lest they them selves should become paupers. Their condition and their prospects are no more favorable than that. Then look at the ignorance of the lower strata of this portion of the nation; look at their poverty, their sufferings, their utter hopelessness of good. Why, in the hopelessness of good. Why, in the American Southern States, during the reign of slavery, every negro had an idea that there was a day of jubilee for him. "Verily," they used to say "the Lord will come and deliver us." But in this class, the lowest strata of the population of your country, I venture to say there is neither belief in any thing better for them, nor scarcely is there any aspiration after it."
