NO. 16.

THE PLAIN LOVER.

I was a coquette. Many a lover's heart I had lacerated by refusing his him on to a declaration. My last victim's name was James Frazer. He man, but his heart was as steel. I respected him highly, and felt pained when I witnessed his anguish at my rejection of him. But the fact was, I had myself fallen in love with Captain Elliott, who had been unremitting in his devotion to me.

Mr. Jas. Frazer warned me against Elliot, but I charged him with jealousy and took his warning as an insult.

A few days afterwards Elliot and I were engaged, and my dream of romantic love seemed to be in a fair way of realization. I had a week of happiness. Many have not so much in a lifetime. Many awake from the bright of my injury, and that very day Cap lifelong darkness, and bondage from which there is no escape. Thank God I was not so miserable as they!

My mother was a widow in good circumstances, but had very bad health. She was also of an easy, listless, credulous nature—hating trouble, and willing to take things just as they happen to present themselves. She therefore made no inquiries about Captain Elliot-but fondly believed that inasmuch as he was a Captain he must necessarily be a man of honor also, especially as he had served in the Crimea and India and won medals. His regiment was quartered in our neighborhood, and he had the reputation of being one of the wealthiest, as he was certainly the handsomest officer in it.

I remember well the day we became engaged. He was on duty, but had managed to ride over to our house in his uniform, and while we were walking in the garden he made the tender avowal. I referred him to 'mamma;' he hastened to her-returning in a few minutes, and led me into her presence to receive the assurance that the ma ternal consent had been readily given. My dear mother hated trouble, and no moreover loved ma tonderly; so that she was well pleased to find a husband presenting himself in a form and manner apparently so eligible for her beloved and only daughter.

Well a week passed quite de fully as I have said; and at the expiration of this there might have been seen an concettian party winding through our old Devonshire woods and quiet country roads. Elliot and I led the cavalcade. I rode my own beautiful brown Bess. Captain Elliot was mounted on a handsome black horse that had been sent from London .-Following us was a bevy of merry girls and their cavaliers; and among them was tall, awkward and silent Jas. Frazer. His presence had marred all the pleasure of my ride, and I was glad to be in advance of them all that I might not see him.

And as we rode on through the woods, and I listened, well pleased, to the low but animated words of the gallant Elliot, who wished himself a knight and me a fair layde of the oldagain and again that he might proclaim and maintain his love before the world. It pleased me to listen to this such a test.

A shot suddenly rang through the past, fluttered and fell at the feet of

I could only cling breathlessly to the mane and bridle, and wonder helplessly where this mad gallop was to end. She swerved from a passing wagon, and turned into a path that led to the river. In the sudden movement the reins had been torn from my hands and I could not regain them. I clung to the mane and closed my eyes, that I might not behold the fate that awaited me. How sweet was life in those precious moments that I thought my last. How all its affections, its last crowning love rose up before me. I thought of the pang that would rend Elliot's heart as he saw me lying, mangled and dead; and the thought would come if he were pursuing and trying to save me; even, as he had said, at the afterward, I woke to a faint, weak semblance of life in my chamber at home. I never saw Captain Elliot again. The last words I ever beard offer of marriage, after I had lured from his lips were those of a knightly daring. The last action of his life in connection with mine, was to follow was a tall, awkward, homely, ungainly in the train of fright ened youths who rode after me, to contemplate the disaster from afar, and as soon as he saw me lifted from the shallow bed of the river, into which I had been thrown when my frightened horse stopped suddenly on its banks, to ride hastily off. That evening he sent to make inquiries and learning that I was severe-

When I was once more abroad, beginning, though with much unalloyed bitterness, to learn the lesson of patience and resignation that awaited me, I received a letter from him, in which he merely said that he presumed my own judgment had taught me, that in my altered circumstances, our engagement must come to an end, but to satisfy his own sense of bonor (his. honor!) he wrote to say while entertaining the highest respect for me he desired a formal renunciation of my claim. Writing on the bottom of this letter, "Let it be as you wish," I returned it to him at once, and thus end-

I heard ere this of Elliot's cowardly, unmanly conduct on that day, but now I first bethought me to inquire who had rescued me from that imminent death. And I learned that Jas. Frazer, his arm already broken by the jerk with which brown Bess tore away from him as he caught at her bridle, had ridden after me, and been the first to lift me from the water. Many lines dally be made inquiries converse ing me; his had been the hand that sent the rare flowers that had decked my room; his were lips that breathed words of comfort and hope to my poor mother: his were the books that I read during the days of convalescence and his, now, the arm that supported
