HUNTINGDON, PA.
Cassville Soldiers' Orphan School.

In the Trough Creek Valley, near Shirley's Knob, in the County of Huntingdon, is situated the little village of Cassville. This village is about ten miles from Huntingdon, a station on the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the road leading from this point to Cassville lies directly over Siding Hill mountain. The view from the top of this mountain summit is very grand and beautiful.

At this place is located the Cassville Soldiers' Orphan School. The main buildings of which there are two, are substantial brick structures, one being known as the school house, and the other as the home. The school house is 32 by 62 feet two stories in height and surmounted by a cupola, which contains a bell. The home is 32 by 82 feet, four stories in height and also of brick. The first story contains the dining room, wash room, bake-room, store-room, &c. In the second story are the "office," sewing department, rooms for visitors, &c. The third story is devoted to the girls and their teachers as a sleeping apartments, while the fourth is the dormitory occupied by the boys.

Both the third and fourth stories are provided with spacious bath rooms, properly fitted up, and adjoining these are the clothes rooms. A mountain rises at the rear of the building, and makes a very picturesque background to the landscape. Near the top of this mountain is a fine spring which supplies the institution with an abundance of excellent water.

These institutions are designed to be both homes and schools. The pupils are not only instructed in the various branches of study taught in our public schools, but they are also instructed in what is just as much consequence—how to work. Each scholar is required to attend school six hours per day, and also to labor for one hour. They rise at half past five in the morning, eat their breakfast at six—the meal occupying half an hour—play from half past six to 8, when they are summoned into the study hall where devotional exercises are performed, and then the day's work begins in earnest. The plan adopted in this school, is to divide the day into half hours, each class studying under the direction of a teacher for a half hour, then going down to their class rooms to recite a half an hour—no recitations are heard; the lessons are recited here, and if the pupil is not able to master the task, it is the duty of the teacher to assist him in overcoming the difficulties. The studies prescribed are reading, Spelling, Writing, Grammar, Geography, and History, and the United States, Algebra, and Mensuration, &c. The pupils as a class are bright and intelligent, and seem greatly interested in their studies. Some of the map drawing done at this school is very fine indeed, and would be creditable to any school of a similar grade in the country.

The school is under the direction of Rev. A. L. Guss, as principal, assisted by Mrs. Guss, as matron. The teachers are five in number, Messrs. A. H. Weisman, S. H. Heaton, and Mr. W. Lytle, Miss C. A. Phillips, and Miss Emma Hall. The number of pupils is 174; 93 boys and 81 girls. The girls are taught to bake, sew, cook, wash and iron, and are required to assist in all of the departments of housewifery. The sewing department is under the direction of Mrs. Mary McCauley, a competent needlewoman; chambermaid, Miss Amelia Ray; Superintendent of dining room, Miss M. Kate Rough; Miss Elizabeth Kertz; baker, Mrs. Rough; and the washing department, Mrs. L. Fulton; farmer, Mr. Bauman; shoemaker, Mr. E. Guss.

The dress of the boys is army blue, with blue cloth caps. The girls wear for Sunday, blue merino with gait buttons, and brown colored hats, or else pink or white dresses trimmed with white buttons. The clothing is all made in the institution, and the pupils are required to assist in its manufacture. The pupils present a neat and tidy appearance, and are kept scrupulously clean, and as a class are remarkably healthy. They are supplied with an abundance of plain and substantial food, and are well cared for, and kindly treated in every respect. This is what is known as an advanced school, no pupil being under ten years of age. At 10 they are discharged—The State pays for the class $10 per annum per pupil, and then clothes them at an expense of $25 additional, making $105 in all, and for every dollar thus expended it will reap a hundred fold return. Boys and girls trained up in these schools are taught to work, and also receive the rudiments of an education, which will enable them to go smoothly through the world. The Cassville school is certainly a very good one, and no taxpayer can make a more worthy object of his generosity and arrangement and supervision of everything connected with this institution is committed to the care of Mr. I. F. H. Spicer, a gentleman whose heart is earnestly in the work and whose services are exceedingly valuable.

"Can I induce you to invest in a look?" smilingly inquired a traveling agent for an improved door fastening, of a plain looking old maid, who he encountered sweeping off the front step. "You smile, young man, replied, with a gleam in his eye, as he carefully, for a moment, from head to foot, "in wad-look."
