JAMES SIMPSON bile, whose name we are not at liberty to reveal, but whom for the sake of convenience we shall call Mr. A.

Mr. A. is a gentleman in easy circumstances, who has devoted much time to scientific purspits, particularly to experiments with the microscope. It was while examining with the instrument of mess or lichen, taken from the roots of a live eak tree ener the Spring Hill road, that Mr. A. made his astounding discovery. He saw clinging to the minute branches of the lichen that he had been turning about so unceremoniously, a human being, perfect in form, and with a counternance revealing the wildest terror. The microscopic man was magnified.

The microscopic man was magnified to the size of a small red ant, and when to the science of content the eye of Mr. A. it is doubtful which of the two were the most terrified, the experimenter at the unexpected discovery, or his microscopic world.

victim to my enthusiasm in the prosecution of discoveries in the microscopic world? Had my mind become deranged? I kept my terrible secret to myself, for I could not bear the thought of being laughed at about a matter that had caused such sensation to my mind. At last I determined to make further examination of the specimen of lichen. It remained as I had at first examined it. The microscope was adusted over it. I looked again, with what interest may well be imagined, and there lay the man that I had seen before, but living no longer. He had died, probably of exhaustion, and there he lay clinging with a death grip to the lichen boughs, whither he had doubtless ventured in search of game. "Further examination convinced me of the truth of the hypothesis. I discovered several animalculæ recently slain. As well as could be made out by the magnifying power of my microscope, the legs of the animalculæ were tied together as visible boys tie squir rels and partridges. The microscopic man evidently wore clothes, but of what material or how formed it was impossible to determine."

Convinced beyond a doubt by what he had seen, of the existence of a race of microscopic human beings, and somewhat familiarized with the idea that so revolted him at first, Mr. A. continued his researches with the greatest zeal. The examination of several more specimens of the lichen, and the soil on which it grow, revealed a few more individuals like that mentioned above All of which he will continue to sell at reasonable prices.
