"Deepest not the Day of Small Things."
This little by little the bee fills her cell;
This little by little the man builds his nest;
This little by little the bird builds her nest;
This little by little the forest in verdure is dressed;
This little by little the great volumes are made;
This little by little a mountain on level is laid;
This little by little we add to a little makes more;
Step by step we walk miles, and we soon sit on a high throne.

LETTER FROM THE WEST.
My old Friend Lewis: Thinking a few lines from one of your old subscribers might be read with some interest I have agreed to pen you a few items on a trip some Sacramento, Cal., to Salt Lake City.
I left Sacramento by yesterday morning's (Tuesday, May 3) train on the C. P. R. R. and got to Salt Lake at 10 o'clock. You will be glad to hear that I gave you even a faint idea of the incidents, experiences and sensations, and changes in climate and scenery from the tropical heat and luxuriant vegetation to the arid and sterile prairie of the west. But as I despair of success in that line I will simply advise each and all of your readers who can do so to take a trip and see for themselves. It will be worth the trouble and expense if they will never forget it.

Is There a God?
How eloquently does Chateaubriand reply to this inquiry: There is a God! The herald of the valley, the cedars of the mountains bless him; the insects sport in his beams; the elephant gambols with the rising orb of the day; the birds sing of Him in the foliage; the thunder proclaims him in the heavens; the ocean declares him in majesty; man alone has said, "There is no God."
Union in thought at the same instant the most beautiful objects in nature; with stars and a night covered with clouds; meadows enamelled with flowers and forests hoary with snows; fields gilded by tint of autumn; then alone you will have a just conception of the universe. While you are gazing at that sun which impaling under the vault of the west, another observer admires him emerging from the gliding gates of the east. By what inconceivable magic does that star, which gliding fatigued and burning in the shades of evening, reappear at the same instant, fresh and humid with the dew of the morning? At every instant of the day that glorious orb is at once rising resplendent at noonday, and setting in the west, or rather calmly descending; it is there, properly speaking, no east, west or south in the world. Everything reduces itself to a single point, from whence the king of the day sends forth a triple light in one substance. The bright splendor is perhaps that which nature can present that is most beautiful; for while it gives us an idea of the perpetual magnificence and resistless power of God, it exhibits at the same time a shining image of the glorious Trinity.
