LIFE'S JOURNEY.

We journey to a better land, A country out of sight— We are not to know what awaits us there, His presence gives us light.

The way is oft beset with snares, And clouds loom overhead; But along the path our Guide, No evil do we dread.

But when the skies are bright and fair, And pleasures crown our days, We pluck the blossoming flowers, and find— Into forbidden paths we stray.

We gather pleasant fruits, that turn To ashes in our grasp; Our Father, lead us back again Into his paths of peace.

We cry, and lo! our Guide appears, And bids our wanderings cease.

He takes us once more by the hand, And signs away our sins; Forgive our wayward wanderings, And soothe our guilty fears.

His hand supports us all the way, Along the toilsome road, Until, at last, our journey ends, We reach His blissful abode.

WAS HE GUILTY?

"Sherriff, remove this prisoner!" commanded the Judge.

"Five years, five long years in the penitentiary! Great God! I am not guilty! I am not!" cried Roginald.

He had been sentenced to five years' hard labor for the crime of breaking the dam of John Clancy's flouring mill.

Two brothers, James and Charles Crocker, were the principal witnesses. They swore that late one night about six months before, as they were walking home, they saw Forrester walking along the path leading to the dam.

Thinking that something had happened to the sluice-gates, they were about to follow in order to assist, when they began to hear the rushing of the props that upheld the timbers.

Horror-struck, they stopped. It was too late. The dam gave away. Rushing down the road toward the mill they shouted—

"The flood! the flood!"

The miller heard the shouts, and had just time to reach the dam with a fearful shout, and the water came crashing down upon the dam close to the sluice-gates.

When Forrester's eyes became fixed upon the dam, he perceived the forms of two men who were bending over the breastwork of the gates.

Soon the sound of voices came to his ears, and he mentioned. He was about to creep through the opening of the bushes when the men began to walk towards him.

"What time is it, Jim?" said one of them.

"Five o'clock for our little job," replied the other.

"This time he'll be cooped up for life—'you bet,' said Jim.

"Or else he'll swing for it," remarked the other.

"He'll swing for it," echoed Jim.

"Look there, Jim," interrupted the other.

"What the devil's up, you fool?"

"I thought I saw a man's face peeping out from the manzanita."

Forrester had protruded his head. He saw by the light of the burning match the bleated faces of James and Charles Crocker.

"Stuff and nonsense! Go to work. Have you fixed the plank so that you can pass it across the gulch to her window?"

"Yes," answered the brother, "but it was devilish hard work."

"Well, two little locomotives work the bow, and it is fingered in this way— Five heavy Dutchmen, dressed in doskin tight, stand on the finger-board between the strings. Each man has a string, you know, and when his string wants to be 'fingered' he sits down on it as quick as a flash, and up and down it goes every time another note is wanted. The effect of this novel proceeding is rich. I saw them when the 'Devil's Dream' was played, and if there wasn't some tall squinting and getting up again then I never was in Boston. The poor fellow who managed to slide along so much to produce glare, had scorched his tights very badly in the seat."

"We are not worthy of losing truth when we can love anything more than that."

"The best head-quarters—brains."

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Those subscribing for three, six or twelve months with the understanding that the paper be discontinued unless subscription is renewed, receiving a paper marked with a † before the name will understand that the time for which they subscribed is up; if they wish the paper continued they will renew their subscription through the mail or otherwise.

All kinds of plain, fancy and ornamental Job Printing neatly and expeditiously executed at the "Globe" office. Terms moderate.

Perseverance.

Diligence and energy, directed by good sense must command success. The last condition is often lacking, and failure is the almost inevitable consequence. A man commences business, gives his whole soul to it, applies himself steadily, early and late, is methodical in his arrangements, and prudent in his measures, and every body prophesies a decided success. "Every body" is premature in his conclusions. The man does not get rich so rapidly as he wishes, or some other pursuit seems more attractive and profitable, and he throws up everything, sells out at a ruinous sacrifice, and embarks with all his capital, all his heart, in something else, which is abandoned in turn, after an equally brief and, of course, equally unsuccessful trial. So he goes on, verifying the old proverb, "A rolling stone gathers no moss."

The accomplished and eloquent Mr. William Wirt says:

"The man who is perpetually hesitating which of the two things he will do first, will do neither. The man who resolves, but suffers his resolution to be broken by the first counter-suggestion of a friend—who fluctuates from opinion to opinion, from plan to plan, and veers like a weathercock to every point of the compass, will never accomplish anything great or useful. Instead of being progressive in anything, he will be best stationary, and more probably retrograde in all. It is only the man who carries into his pursuits that great quality which Lucian ascribes to Cincinnatus, a fierce sternness—who consults wisely, then resolves firmly and then executes his purposes with inflexible perseverance, undimmed by those petty difficulties which daunt a weaker spirit, that can advance to eminence in any line."

We have read of a man who, on first commencing business, opened and shut his shop day after day for several weeks without selling goods to the value of two cents, but persevering finally made his fortune in that very line.

"Did you ever know anybody," asks Jos. O. Neal, "to stick to any kind of business, no matter how unpromising it might be in the beginning, for ten years at least, who did not prosper? Not one—if he stuck to it earnestly, and tried nothing else, no matter how hard he found it at times to keep his mind from wandering, still, if he persevered, he 'always came out right in the long run.'—Whatever he might have been at the beginning, at the end he was a success."

When, after mature consideration, you have marked out a course for yourself, you must resolve to adhere to it till success shall crown your efforts, or until you have ascertained beyond a doubt that you have mistaken the course.

SINKING VALLEY.—A correspondent in the Philadelphia Press, thus describes Sinking Valley, Blair county, Pa.: Its name, Sinking Valley, is indicative of its character. A large stream enters it from the upper end, and flows for no considerable distance until it sinks into a hole in the earth many of which appear to be unfathomable. After a short distance it reappears, only to sink again in the same manner. But by far the most remarkable feature of this valley is, such a manner as the water enters it, it is entered by this stream. The entrance is something like 15 feet high, by 40 wide. It is nearly a mile in extent, and may be traced for a long distance, in an upright posture. Curious stalactites and stalagmites may be obtained, formed by the dripping of water. Beautifully crystalline coruscations flash in the torchlight, like diamonds. Toward the further extremity of this underground passage of the stream, the cave terminates, and the water sinks into a large cleft in the rocks, only to rise again, & billow and surge in a very violent manner in a deep basin, the sides of which are perpendicular. From this basin, it flows under the bill through an arch that is well worth the pencil of an artist. Its exit forms that curiously shaped spring which is so famous in the Springs. This we regard as one of the greatest natural phenomena in the country. It is cut through a hill of solid limestone, in such a manner as to suggest the work of art. At its entrance it is 12 or 15 feet in height, and one might easily pass through in a boat. How such a perfect work could have been effected in a natural manner, is wholly unaccountable. So large is the stream here that a very large gnat mill and saw mill are driven by it; yet a great part of the water is not used. After flowing less than a quarter of a mile farther, it falls, with a loud roar, into a cleft in the rocks, after which its course is known to no mortal man. Perhaps it goes to swell the volume of some subterranean river, upon whose banks are built no cities; but the manner of its exit into the world is heard by no human ear."

WELL SAID.—It would be no privilege to be the wife of the larger portion of the men one meets on the street, and I not infrequently find myself analyzing masculine faces; and guessing at the reason why existing between such a one and his wife, it is but rarely, I confess it, that I meet a face which tempts me to say, "Happy is the woman that calls this husband."

To enjoy a good night's repose, take a cold towel bath before retiring, and a bowl of cold water and a hard scrub towel, used vigorously over the body, are all that are necessary. (except a clear conscience) to secure a good night's rest.
