THE JOURNEY OF LIFE

On the banks of that broad river, That flows on from day to day, Oft, in childhood, have I wandered With my comrades there to play: Or some pleasant day in summer We would take our little boat And we'd sit and sing together As we down the stream would float.

Back beyond the tall green rushes, That grew at the river's side, Half a mile from that blue river Where we used to sing and ride, Stood the cottage of my father: Where my early days were spent, And where round the family altar We in supplication bent.

But years have passed since childhood And the scene has changed since the For stern death has been among us, Stole a lamb from out the pen; Stole a mother from her children, Robbed a husband of his wife, Made that little cottage lonely And took the idol of my life.

Still we struggle on together,
All that's left of that small band. 'Ever onward' is our motto
As we journey hand in hand. But the journey is not gloomy, Though a small and helpless band,

For we know we'll meet that loved one In a bright and better land.
