A Telegraphic Mistake.

It was a beautiful day in the month of June, some two years ago, that Charles Fitzgerald, his wife and his two children, were on their way to Indianapolis, on the Hudson railroad depot, and soon after his journey westward.

After chatting awhile in the office of the hotel, he retired to his room, happy at his success and his heart full of love. He sang a few staves of a song, and scarcely had the last words left his lips when, after knocking politely at his door, the porter entered with a telegraphic message.

It was as follows: "New York, June, 1867. To CHARLES FITZGERALD, Indianapolis. Your wife sick with a child yesterday; do not leave home until you are informed."

His name was Fitzgerald, and when at home, he lived at 937 1/2 Fifth Avenue. Perfect and devoted as his love had been, he was alarmed. He knew nothing of such an event likely to occur in Congress or elsewhere to impose negro suffrage upon the people of this State in opposition to their will.

Between Albany and New York he fell asleep, had horrible dreams of wet nurses, baby wagons, doctor's bills, and whistles, Godfrey's cordial, all danced in their respective turns before him.

At last he reached New York and jumping into a hack, volunteered in a very decided and tragic manner to the "HOMER."

"Can't drive you home, unless you tell me where you live," answered the untried whip.

"In a few moments he was in front of his home; mounting the front steps he felt received a jerk which brought the servant from the kitchen without much delay.

"Who's there?" "It's me," replied the voice with the quickness.

"Charles Fitzgerald, and I want to come in at once," the reply; getting somewhat worked up, the idea of being kept out.

"You can't come in just now," said the squeaky voice, "I'll let you in in a minute."

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Those subscribing for three, six or twelve months with the understanding that the paper be discontinued unless subscribers be notified receiving a paper marked within a few days, will understand that the time for which they subscribed is up; if they wish the paper continued they will renew their subscription through the mail or otherwise.

All kinds of plain, fancy and ornamental Job Printing neatly and expeditiously executed at the "Globe" office. Terms moderate.

"My dear Charles," replied the young wife, filling her deep blue eyes with tears, "why do you treat me so coldly? Are you not glad to see me?"

"Madame," he replied, "does not your own conscience tell you that you deserve no show of affection from me? Have you not called me away from home; but now business of an important nature demanded his attention, and he set out for Indianapolis at once."

"Yes, deceived me," replied Charles. "You did not tell me of this before I left home."

"I tell you what," replied Bessie amazed. "I did not know that it would be so bad, and I could not have known it. Mrs. Williams says I can sit up to-morrow."

"Certainly not. And now, Charles, give me some kisses, and then talk me what all this excitement means."

"Yes, yes, Bessie; a dozen of them—here they are. And now, Bessie, show me that baby."

"Come, Bessie, don't tantalize me—show me that baby!" and as he walked a response, he heard a stifled laugh, and turning around, beheld Mrs. Brown, with an engaged in studying her apron down her throat, in which opening she would have finally succeeded, had not Mr. Fitzgerald interfered with her design.

Bessie also caught a fit of violent laughter, and Fitzgerald stood looking at these two laughing women scarcely aware of his own identity. After they had quieted somewhat, he ventured to remark that it might be very amusing to him, but they replied, "What baby?"

"Why, Charles," said Bessie, "what baby?" "Never dreamed of such a thing!" "Thank God and Mr. Charles Fitzgerald, you've got no baby!" Mrs. Brown, look you here. "Did you not send a message by telegraph to me saying that my wife was sick and had a child, and for me not to be alarmed?"
