Danton—O, you do us great injustice by charging us with proslavery principles; we are the negro's friends; we are opposed to slavery, but we had our own place of stopping its progress.

Alfred—Yes, you had a place indeed, which was, to sing the syren eong: "Let slavery alone; it will die out of itself;" whilst it was increasing at the alarming rate of nearly seventy thousand a year. At the birth-day of our independence there were but a few thousand slaves in the United States, and at the beginning of the rebellion by Bishop Lee, assisted by Rev. Mr. Potter, son of Bishop Potter.

A little romance is connected with this. When the Bishop was injured solved to dispense it freely in order to secure the patronage of government, from which we have been kept back so long by this foolish war against the South; and if we succeed, we will once more unite with our Southern brethron, and with them control the country as we once did. heart, and its friends, lit throes of wrath, madness and folly, threw reason to the wind, and rushed into rebellion against the kindest-hearted brotherhood that was ever murdered by a fraternity of wicked men.

Danton—But why do you blame the Democracy with having anything to do with rebellion?

Alfred—The Democracy, so called, were to blame for inviting the South to rebel, by words and action not to be misunderstood. Witness the stump speech of Chief Justice Taney, called a decision in the Dred Scott case, where, against reason, history and humanity, in the litterest of slavery, he decided that "the African had no penlitical rights that we were bound to respect;" knowing as he did that the Africans of four of the States did with strong arms assist our fathers in fighting the battles of the revolution, and also by their suffrage assisted in form:
