Your correspondent, in company with the Directors of the Blair county Alms House, was taken through the premises. There you can see almost male assistants in the jail of the county, all kinds of invalids, from the raving maniac to the most submissive; adults who appear to be mere children; old women and men whose ages range from seventy-five to ninety five years, all appearing contented. It was remarked that they appeared much more comfortable than a great many of the taxpayers who contribute to their support. There are about fifty inmates a number of whom are children, tho there is scarcely any more noise in the house than in our best regulated families. The rooms from the cellar to the attic appear to be scrupulously clean, and everything in order. The inmates appear to love the affable and ever watchful steward, Mr. John Logan, who treats them with a fatherly care, seeing that the wants of those who cannot help themselves are attended to, not giving himself rest until all are comfortable in the house.
