THE HOUSEKEEPER'S TRAGEDY. One day, as I wandered, I heard a complaining, And saw a poor woman, the picture of gloom; She glared at the wall on her door-post (twice running), And this was her wail as she wretched her broom: 'Oh! He has left me, and here is a trouble, And beauty will fade, and riches will flee, And pleasures will vanish, and peace they dole, And nothing is what I could wish it to be.

DR. GALL AND THE PRINCE. FROM THE GERMAN. The occasion was one of those private balls in Vienna, such as could be given only by Prince Metternich, that great statesman, who, fifty years ago, had reached the pinnacle of power, and ruled with subtle hand the destinies of Europe.

How to be Miserable. Sit by a window and look over the way to your neighbor's excellent mansion, which he has recently built and paid for and fitted out, and say: 'Oh, that I were a rich man!'

SIMPLICITY IS BEAUTY. The late Fitz Greene Lillack said: 'A letter fell into my hands which a Scotch servant girl had written to her lover. Its style charmed me. It was farly imitable. I wondered how, in her circumstances in life, she could have acquired so elegant a style.'

Buffalo girls are very sassy. 'May I see you home?' inquired a lad of a lass of a certain town. 'You may see me anywhere you like, but you can't walk with me,' was the pert response.

Rolling Stock.—Cattle on railways. An important legal decision has just been given in Westchester, this State. A man named Walker left an umbrella in his wagon, and on returning to it a few minutes later, he found the umbrella had disappeared.

A Good Joke.—The 'local' of the Pittsburgh Commercial gets off the following: That standard, reliable, safe, non-combustible and at present very venacious subject, the weather, was the starting point for a whimsical scene we witnessed the other day in a German store not a hundred miles from the Seventh ward.

Thrilling Scene on Tight Rope. An English paper thus details a thrilling affair which occurred during one of Blondin's recent exhibitions: After he had crossed in a safe manner on a chair, and had done some of his minor feats, it was found that the rope, which was a new one, had slackened so considerably that it would be necessary to tighten it, in order to allow of his performing his new and extraordinary feat of crossing it on a bicycle.

The Young Wife's Secret.

'Now, Eliza, after such a delightful week wedding holiday as we have had, would it not be a good time to tell me your secret?' A young and happy-looking couple seated at breakfast on the morning after their short honeymoon trip, when this question was asked.

'I am quite ready to tell you, James; but I am sure that your pleasure will be greater in finding it out yourself.' Fortune favors the persevering. 'Ah, I know now; you think that we are to count a hundred; or all our mouth with water; or twist a chain, or some such way of getting cool when we happen to get angry.'

'No, James, none of those; it is much more certain, attended with better effects.' 'Perhaps you mean that we should shut ourselves up in different rooms, or not speak to one another for a week?' 'No, dear James, none so cruel as that. Heaven forbid that we should ever be driven to such extremities! By persevering in my secret, we shall love one another as truly as we do now. Our trust in one another will increase, and, besides, we shall be happier we shall be. You will very likely say that it is no secret at all, now that I tell you; the secret was to avoid a second quarrel is never to have a first.'

'Castal!' exclaimed James, laughing; 'I will stick to that with all my heart.' He would have liked to prolong the conversation, but the wedding holiday was over, and he wished to be punctual at work. So, taking up his hat, he turned to a good-by kiss on his wife's rosy lips, resolving, as he went out, to put her speech to the test.

'Keep Him Down!—When a poor man attempts to rise—attempts to show that there is no monopoly of genius, and that God has given as free and noble a soul to the lowly as to the great—he is not only opposed by the class above him, but every side and every eye is turned against him. They do not like to see themselves outstripped by one whom they have reckoned no better than themselves, and of encouraging him; they damp his ardor, and withhold his heart with sneers and cold looks; they are envious, envious, envious; and the next class above love not to see a man who has naught to boast of, but a noble soul, no treasures save those of mind; presuming to take his place among those who have the conventional show of 'Keep him down!' This upward struggle which the poverty-stricken genius has to endure—the struggle against prejudice and misrepresentation and want—has daunted many a mind; and discouraged many a breast; and has kept many a man, formed to be a light to the world in poverty and darkness to the end of his days. Because of this many a noble spirit has been concealed its own flame of brightness; many noble and free men, of whom the world was not worthy, have gone down into the grave with all the wisdom of their souls untold—have died, and made no sign.'

'A Lovely Incident.—We recently heard the following most touching incident: A little boy died; his body was laid out in a darkened, retired room, waiting to be laid away in the lone, cold grave. His afflicted mother and bereaved father went in to look at the sweet face of the precious sleeper; for his face was beautiful even in death. As they stood gazing upon the form of one so beloved and cherished, the little girl asked to take his hand. The mother at first did not think it best; but as the child repeated the request, and seemed very anxious about it, she took the cold bloodless hand of the sleeping boy, and placed it in the hands of the weeping sister. The dear child held it a moment, caressed it fondly; then looked up at her mother, through her tears of affection and love, and said: 'Mother, this little hand never struck me! What could be more touching and lovely?' Young readers, have you at any time seen a girl to brood over a sick sister, and to give you a telling smile as if she could read your memory? Could a brother or sister take your hand, were it cold in death, and say: 'This hand never struck me!'
