TO CONSUMPTIVES EVERYWHERE.

A correspondent of a Georgia paper writes as follows: "Having seen much suffering from consumption, and knowing that thousands of dollars are yearly spent by invalids traveling for their health, and on medicines and physicians, we propose a simple receipt by which patients may become their own physicians, and if not too far gone, will guarantee a perfect cure if made and regularly taken according to directions.

TO CONSUMPTIVES EVERYWHERE.

"I don't care if I ever see another dog between this and the silent grave. I only wish that all the dogs from here to Russian America were collected into a convention, and had hold of that man with the staff, that they might gnaw on him until he had not a morsel of meat left on his skeleton. That is all I want in the dog line in this world.

LOVE AND DE HAVY. It is the easiest thing in the world to be happy if men and women would only think so. Happiness is only another name for love; for where love exists in a household, there happiness must also exist, even though it has poverty for a close companion.

The House-Fly.

How many of our readers are familiar with the early history of the common house-fly, an insect that makes its appearance in early spring in countless swarms, coming from some unknown locality, and disappearing almost as mysteriously.

The order of Diptera, to which our fly belongs, is one of the most numerous orders of the animal kingdom, and its members, in their different forms, include many of the greatest pests in existence, both to man and animal.

The mosquito, the knat, the biting-fly, and the horse-fly, the tsetse, zimbaid and other species, are well-known illustrations of this order, many of them being armed with lancets and other forms of aggressive weapons, by means of which they become a source of torment.

The house-fly, however, although provided with a somewhat similar apparatus, does not use it commonly as a means of offense, its offensiveness consisting principally in the pertinacity with which it insists upon crawling over the skin, or in pestiferous articles of food.

The eggs of the house-fly are laid in decaying vegetable matter, such as dead leaves, and especially in manure of stables, about seventy or eighty being the usual number. These soon hatch, and the larva grows rapidly feeding upon the substances found near it.

After a short time the fourth skin hardens, and becomes brown and tough forming a case, which is a little barrel divided into rings. The transformation of the larva is quickly made, and the animal is soon ready to emerge as a perfect insect.

The common blow fly is another species of the order Diptera, which is generally found in the neighborhood of a stable or barn, and is distinguished from the house-fly in general appearance, but with the wings diverging more widely when in state of rest, is provided with a very powerful lancet, by means of which blood may be drawn in an instant, settling upon the body of an animal.

The house-fly, both as grub and perfect insect, furnishes food to a great variety of other animals; but the destruction of the adults is largely due to the growth of a parasitic fungus which attacks it, and developing rapidly in its interior, soon exhausts its vitality.

A RASH PROPOSAL. The Portland Argus tells the following story of a young lady who is a pupil at one of the schools in that city, and who has already, it seems, beaten her father at mathematics.

She modestly proposed that if her father would give her only one cent on one day, and double the amount on each successive day for just one month she would pledge herself never to ask of him another cent of money as long as she lived.

Her father, in reply, agreed to her proposal, and she, in accepting, he might be obliged to be declared a bankrupt on his own petition.

But at the thirtieth day the young girl demanded only the pretty sum of $8,388,709.12! The astonished merchant was only too happy to cancel the claim by advancing a handsome cash payment for his word he considered as good as his bond, without noticing the consideration therein expressed, and by promising to return to the old custom of advancing smaller sums daily until otherwise ordered.

Our arithmetic reporter has been "figuring on it," and says that if the old gentleman had fulfilled his promise, his gushing daughter would have had, upon receipt of the thirtieth payment the snug little sum of $10,436,517.43.

Schulenburg's "Chickens" means here, among the Chickens—almost anywhere else, a word of that size would mean business.

A simple "cure" may probably stand for a cure without a cure; but a sensation advertisement should be charged as often as you can get the printer to do it.

Mrs. Stanton's advice about choosing a wife is: "Always look for a girl with good teeth, for the teeth are a sample of every bone in the fair one's body."

Mrs. John Meekins, residing in Chester, Delaware county, gave birth to seventeen pounds of children—two girls, five pounds each, and one boy, seven pounds. The little ones are said to be bright and pretty.

A Quaker once hearing a parson tell how much he had lost for a number who was in distress and needed assistance, drily asked him: "Friend, had you felt thy pocket for him?"
