A MAN named John Real was hung in New York city on Friday last for the murder of a police officer on the 23d of July, 1868. Real asserted that he was doomed to the gallows because he did not belong to the political ring in power, which, if truthful, throws some new light on the manner in which the laws are enforced in that city.

They therefore authorized their chairman, R. B. Bryan, to report the results appending the names of the committee which he is pleased to do as follows:

Of the eight machines presented as Mowers, two, to wit, the Kirby and the Champion was considered the best. The remaining six, to wit, the Excelsior, the Koystone, the World, the Bubard, the Dodge, and the Obio Harvester, were combined machines, and as such we considered the Hubbard the best mower of the which the laws are enforced in that city.

The New York Globe ,says, what ever the designs or imperiousness o Bismarck, it is evident the blame for the present European war must fall upon the shoulders of Napoleon. Already are his hands red with the blood of M. Prevost Paradol. It is now believed that this eminent French Minister and liberal was made miserable by the part which he had been led to play by the Emperor in causing him to leave France at this important crisis, and sending him to the Great Republic to appear as a partisan of that personal government which he so heartily detested. The depression of mind which this caused led the brilliant Minister to take his life. Napoleon could better afford to lose a battle than to be the means of causing the death
