TO MARY.

Now, Mary lay reserve aside— You know it ne'er can please me; It hurts me sore to hear you chide, Then why thus ever tease me?

BY WILLIAM FARRELL.

Thy rosy cheeks, and thy bright yout And all thy modest beauty, Believe me, dear, I speak the truth, Were made for other duty. The birds were made to soar thro' air, With songs the world beguiling;
For pleasure, too, the lilies fair,
And Mary's lips for smiling!

Then, why distort that pretty face, To charm by Heaven intended, Where beauty roigns, and every grace With sweetness God has blended? Tined with the cold return of love,

With which you so perplex me,
I sometimes swear by all above,
You never more will vex me. When last we met my heart was sore, You know then how we parted;— Oh! Mary, thus my life why boro? Why make me broken-hearted?

No longer, Mary, let me pine, But show by your consenting,
'Tis wiser far, our lots to join
Than be thus e'er repenting.
