The Muses' Dower.

John Burns of Gettysburg.

BY BERT HARTZ.

Have you heard the story that gossips tell Of Burns of Gettysburg?—No! Ah, well; Brief is the glory that hero earns, Brief the story of poor John Burns; He was the fellow now renowned,— The only man that didn't back down When the rebels ran, through his hat and vein But let his own bright day be known. When all his townfolk ran away, That was in July, sixty-three, The very day that General Lee, Flowered of Somers chivalry, Baffled and beaten, backward reeled From a stubborn Meade and a barren field.

I might tell how, but the day before, John Burns stood at his cottage door, Looking down the village street, Where, in the shade of his peevish vine, He heard the low of his gathered kin, And felt their breath with increase sweet; Or I might say, when the sunset burned, How he would argue, but not in vain, He heard the low of his gathered kin, And felt their breath with increase sweet; Or I might say, when the sunset burned, How he would argue, but not in vain, He heard the low of his gathered kin, And felt their breath with increase sweet;

The time at which this conversation took place was at the commencement of the second year of their married life.

The first step which Mrs. Newton took, on accepting the charge of the household expenses, was to ascertain the practice of paying cash for all articles that came under her department. She accordingly called on the butcher and inquired: "How often have you been in the habit of presenting your bills, Mr. Williams?" "Once in six months" was the reply. "And I suppose you sometimes have had bills?" "Yes, one-third of my profits on an average, except of fish."

"And you could afford, I suppose to sell somewhat cheaper for ready money?" "Yes, and would be glad if all my customers would give me a chance to do so."

"I will tell you an example then," said Mrs. Newton. "Hereafter whenever articles shall be purchased of you we will pay for on the spot, and we shall expect you to sell as reasonably as you can."

This arrangement was also made with other vendors who were supplied with goods, and were very glad to enter into the arrangement. Ready money is the great support of trade, and a cash customer is worth two who purchase on credit.

Fortunately Mrs. Newton had a small supply of money by her which lasted till the first monthly installment from her husband became due. Thus she was enabled to carry out her cash plan from the beginning.

Another plan which occurred to her as likely to save expenses, was to purchase articles in large quantities. She had soon saved enough from the money allowed her to do this. For example, instead of buying sugar a few pounds at a time, she purchased a barrel, and so succeeded in saving a cent or more on the pound. This practice amounted to but a trifle in the course of a year, but as she had regularly deposited whatever money she had not expended in one of the institutions—she found that she had one hundred and fifty dollars besides reimbursing herself for the money during the first month, and having enough to last another.

"Well Elizabeth, have you kept within your allowance?" asked her husband at the end of the month. "I have not found it so easy to save as I thought for."

"I have saved something, however," said his wife. "But how is it with you?" "That is more than I can say. However, I have not exceeded my income. That's one good thing. I find I have exactly spent all. But I can't see how you have saved anything. We have lived full as well, and I don't know what better than last year, when we spent five hundred dollars."

"It's knuck, Ezra," said his wife, smiling. "She was not inclined to mention how much she had saved. She wanted some time or other to surprise him with it when it would be of some service."

"She may possibly have saved up twenty-five dollars," thought Mr. Newton, "or some such trifle," and so dismissed the matter from his mind.

At the end of the second year, Mrs. Newton's savings, including the interest, amounted to three hundred and fifty dollars, and she began to feel quite rich.

Her husband did not think to inquire how she had succeeded, supposing, as before, that it could be but a very small sum. However he had a piece of good news to communicate. His salary had been raised from a thousand to twelve hundred dollars.

"He is well," said his wife, smiling. "As I before allowed you one half my income for household expenses, it is no more than fair that I should do so now. That will give you a better chance to save up a part of it than before. In saving, I don't know how you succeeded in saving anything thus far."

As before Mrs. Newton merely said that she had saved something without specifying the amount.

Her allowance was increased to six hundred dollars, but her expenses were not proportionally increased at all; so that her savings for the third year swelled the aggregate sum in the savings' bank to six hundred dollars.

Mr. Newton, on the contrary, in spite of his increased salary, was no better off at the end of the third year than before. His expenses had increased by a hundred dollars, though he would have found it difficult to tell in what way his comfort or happiness had been increased thereby.

In spite of his carelessness in regard to his own affairs, Mr. Newton was an excellent man in regard to business, and his services were valuable to his employer. They accordingly increased his salary from time to time till it reached sixteen hundred dollars. He had steadily preserved the custom of assigning one half to his wife for the same purpose as heretofore, and this had become such a habit that he found it necessary to inquire whether she found it necessary to employ the whole or not.

Thus ten years rolled away. During all this time Mr. Newton lived in the same hired house which he had paid an annual rent of one hundred and fifty dollars. Latterly, however, he had become dissatisfied with it. It had passed into the hands of a new landlord, who was not disposed to keep it in the repair which he considered desirable.

About this time a block of excellent houses were erected by a capitalist, who designed to sell or let them as he might have an opportunity. They were more modern and much better arranged than the one in which Mr. Newton now lived, and he felt every month, I will at each payment hand you half the money."

The different characters of the husband and wife may be judged from the conversation which has been recorded. Mr. Newton had but little prudence of foresight. He lived chiefly for the present, and seemed to fancy that whatever contingencies might arise in the future, he would somehow be provided for. Now trust in Providence is a very proper feeling, but there is a good deal of truth in the old adage that God will help those who help themselves, and in proportion as they are disposed to help themselves.

Mrs. Newton, on the contrary, had been brought up in a family which was compelled to be economical, and although she was not disposed to deny herself comforts, yet she felt that it was desirable to procure them at a fair price.

The time at which this conversation took place was at the commencement of the second year of their married life.

The first step which Mrs. Newton took, on accepting the charge of the household expenses, was to ascertain the practice of paying cash for all articles that came under her department.
