for work, let him be shod properly. Let his stable be dry and clean; the feet should be washed morning and evening in clean water, and the heels wiped dry at once; and every fourth or fifth day, when the hoofs are dry, a pledget of tow, charg-ed with Barbadoes tar, may be introduced into the clefts of the frog, and the same pressed gently into the commissures. If the animal is not required for work, let the shoeing be omitted, and all other things prescribed attended to. In most

Much is said just now about forcing FLOUR, FEED, GROUND PLASTER, &C farm stock. The term is misapplied. If we overfeed we hurt the stomach. This is but another term for "forcing" food in the are to feed what the stomach can readily digest; more is a hurt, and is an attempt a forcing nature; it will not succeed. "Crowding," "forcing," "over-feeding," these are all terms that are to be avoided in the feedeat with comfort and relish. The relish always points to digestion, and should always be kept up, so that at the regular times of feeding there is an appetite, a wish for food. Let this food be nutritous and abundant, but not so as to burden the brute; to oppress the stomach is to hurt it. Thus feed—so as to give comfort and satisfaction—and the best results will be obtained. Much food will thus be used by some animals, the greedy and the strong of digestion.—Thus we "stuff" turkeys when we wish them to advance rapidly—that is, in fat. We do not want to "force" muscle in this way. The young animal must be grown, not forced Let us give nature free course, and aid her all we can by a judicious selection of food, and see that there is plenty of it, with plenty of intelligence to direct the feeding. Keep growing, but avoid overloading, for this will interfere with what is aimed at. Healthy digestion—keep healthy this is what is wanted; but feed no more, for this will be crowding and hurting and intro-ducing a foreign substance in the excess of bear, and which goes into the dung-heap. Hence the rich manure of stock that is fattening, which is generally "crowded." We should feed what a healthy digestion can bear without harm, and to do this requires experience.

At seven, the mark has disappeared from the dividers, and the next teeth, or corners, are level, though showing no mark. At eight, the mark has gone from the corners, and the horse is said to be aged. After this time—indeed, good anthorities say after five years—the age of a horse can only be conjectured. But the teeth gradually change their form, age of a horse can only be conjectured. But the teeth gradually change their form, the incisors becoming round, oval, and then triangular. Deders sometimes bishop the teeth of old horses; that is, scoop them out to imitate the mark; but this can be known by the absence of the white edge of chamel which always surrounds the real mark, by the shape of the teeth, and other marks of age about the animal.
