THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE FOR WHARTON & MAGUIRE, Winter Arrangement Raising Calves for Milkers. after Saturday, November 25th, 1871, Pas ill arrive and depart as follows: BOOTS AND SHOES, FISHER & SONS, It is not sufficient that we save all the good calves from the kuife of the butcher, but we must give them wise and judicious treatment. Having chosen the animals to be raised, it is necessary to feed with generosity, and at the same time with caution, that a well-built frame be established. The attention of Merchants is called to our PROPRIETORS FOREIGN AND AMERICAN Mens' Farming Balmoral Plow Shoes. generosity, and at the same time with caution, that a well-built frame be established. A young animal intended for the dairy may be spoiled in the outset by improper feeding; or one that has been mistakenly selected, will take on fat in spite of all care, and may be discarded. It is not fat that we want. We want growth of' bone and muscle, and all fattening food must be avoided. Good pasture through the summer, and feed of which wheat or rye bran and buckwheat meal are the principal constituents, are all that are needed, besides a regular supply of salt and free access to water. At the season when pasturing is over, the period has arrived which makes or mars the young beast. The cold rains and piercing winds of autumn have arrived, and one exposure to them will give the calf a check which can be overcome only with much care. No young animal should be permitted to suffer from cold or wet to such an extent that its back is drawn upwards like a bow. When this occurs, dangerous effects will surely follow. Immediate steps should be taken to remedy these evil effects. Laxative food, with warm drinks and dry, warm quarters will prevent hidebound and loss of condition, which would hinder growth throughout the whole of the ensuing winter.
